It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

IN ASSEMBLY,

MARCH 14, 1898.

THIRD ANNUAL REPORT OF THE STATE HISTORIAN.

To the Hon. JAMES M. E. O'GRADY, Speaker of the Assembly,
State of New York:

Sir:—In accordance with custom, I herewith have the honor to submit to the Honorable the Legislature the Third Annual Report of the State Historian.

During the year just closed the Department has had every reason to congratulate itself upon the gratifying results achieved. Progress has been made in the transcription of the Colonial records deposited in the State Library.

The work of copying, for publication, the Colonial muster-rolls has been finished. The last report of the State Historian contained the muster-rolls from 1664 to 1760. In this report will be found the remaining rolls from 1760 to the outbreak of the Revolutionary War including a batch between 1686 to 1760, that does not appear in the second annual report. For the interesting decade prior to 1775, the number of muster-rolls is surprisingly and disappointingly small. Perhaps the uncertainty of the times deterred patriots from allying themselves with the military forces of his Gracious Majesty George the Third. A more reasonable explanation for the falling off in the number of the rolls is that Governor Tryon shipped many of them to England, with the documents and records that he conveyed aboard the Asia, British man-of-war, in May, 1775. Nearly all the muster-rolls that have been transcribed are descriptive in character, and are, therefore, more interesting to the descendants of those whose names appear on them.

PUBLIC PAPERS OF GOVERNOR DANIEL D. TOMPKINS.

One of the most valuable collections of manuscripts in the State Library was purchased by act of Legislature, in 1885, from the descendants of Daniel D. Tompkins, who was Governor of New York from 1807 to 1817. The collection consists of fifteen manuscript volumes, and includes the Governor's judicial, state and military papers. A vast amount of unwritten history lies within these tomes. As Governor of the State during the second war with Great Britain, and as Military Governor of the Third United States Military District, Governor Tompkins' facilities for obtaining the best information were without a parallel during those troublous times. He saw much and wrote considerably. His military papers are practically a history of the War of 1812, from the standpoint of New York. Inasmuch as written histories, generally, have treated New York State with indifference, or ignored her existence entirely, the greater part of the information contained in the volume of military papers, which is now in press, will be a revelation. A brief sketch of the causes that led to the war and of the war itself, omitting the sea operations, accompanies this volume.

THE COMPILATION OF THE RECORDS OF THE CAVALRY, ARTILLERY AND ENGINEER REGIMENTS, DURING THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

The records of the cavalry, artillery and engineer regiments that went to the front from this State during the War of the Rebellion have been compiled and only require editing and comparison with the originals before being transmitted to the printer.

While the State Historian takes this opportunity to express his thanks to all survivors of the war who have complied with requests from the office for information, which, from their personal experience, they could supply with authority, he deprecates the disinclination of many officers who were in command of regiments or detachments of regiments, especially of the cavalry, to bestow a little attention, thought and time upon straightening out, clearing up or perfecting a record in honor of the commands with which they were connected. The excuses offered by this latter class of officers were brief and various. An ex-colonel of cavalry simply wrote on the back of the letter that was sent him, "too busy." Another one declared he "hadn't time." The more common way of evading questions was to refer to some publication, which had been, of course, consulted before the inquiry was sent to the officer.

But, on the whole, there is cause for sincere congratulation in the generous co-operation extended to the Department by many surviving old soldiers, as the appendices indicate. Special efforts were made to perfect the records of the cavalry regiments as far as possible, for the reason that the histories of some of these organizations will be printed this coming year. It is regrettable that the records of the cavalry regiments were not kept in better condition. The most important operations during what are now known as historical campaigns are found to-day scarcely mentioned in general reports. It was seldom, indeed, that the commandant of a cavalry regiment or of a cavalry detachment made a full report of the operations of his command. Consequently, the heroic work performed by this particular arm of the service is neither appreciated or understood. Men who were in the saddle for days, encountering all sorts of privations and meeting with all sorts of vicissitudes, whose entire life was one of exposure, and who never encamped in the same spot for two successive nights, had but little inclination and disposition—and often very few facilities—to write reports.

However, with the generous co-operation of a number of the surviving officers of the volunteer cavalry regiments of this State, this Department has been fortunate in receiving a considerable amount of data, much of it of an exceedingly valuable character, relating to New York cavalry organizations. A great deal of the data thus obtained cannot be duplicated elsewhere. It has been dug out of diaries that were preserved through all the uncertainties of an active military life, and from letters written on the has come in official contact, by the uniform courtesy and cordial disposition to lend assistance at all times for the successful prosecution of the work in hand. To the officers in the State Library, the Adjutant-General's office, the State Comptroller's and Secretary of State's offices, the warmest thanks of the Department are due, for the many favors advanced.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

HUGH HASTINGS,

State Historian.

FIRST INFANTRY AFFAIR OF THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

OF LIEUTENANT JOHN B. WOODWARD OF G COMPANY, THIRTEENTH NEW YORK STATE MILITIA, IN REGARD TO THE CAPTURE OF THE SMITH'S POINT LIGHTSHIP AT MILL CREEK, CHESAPEAKE BAY, MD., MAY 17, 1861.

At the outbreak of the Rebellion, when President Lincoln made call for troops, the New York State Militia Regiments were sent to the front, Thursday, April 18, 1861, to the front. The following day the Thirteenth Regiment, six hundred strong, proceeded to Washington. The late General John B. Woodward was Second Lieutenant of Company G. For several weeks the regiment, which was commanded by Abel Smith, remained at Annapolis, and it was part of the command of General Butler. Young Woodward maintained constant correspondence with his family.

On the 18th of May he wrote home, the following memorandum being written before the date of the letter: "I have done a little work endorsing the Stars and Stripes O. K."

It is alluded to the affair which occurred the day before at Mill Creek, Maryland, in which Varian's Battery of the Eighth Regiment, on board the steam tug Stevens, and Company G of the Thirteenth Militia, on board the steamer William Woodward, were captured.

Inasmuch as no official report was ever made of this engagement, which was distinguished for the first interchange of hostile infantry shots between the North and South, the subjoined letter from General Woodward will be found interesting:

“ Dear Father:

I have this moment (11 a. m.) returned from the expedition upon which I was despatched on the 16th instant.

The mission upon which we were sent was to recapture a light-ship which was taken by the Secessionists from Smith's Point and stowed snugly away in a small creek about the width of Byron river, named Mill creek, which empties into the Great Wycomico river, a tributary of this great bay. We arrived at the river at 5 a. m. yesterday, found out, by scaring a darky until his wool was white, where our prize lay, went there, saw her, got alongside of her, hitched on, and brought her here. The banks of the creek were high, looking as if washed away by the river, with underbrush to the very edges. From this the Lancaster Grays, who had charge of the ship, gave us a pretty warm fire. After patiently waiting a minute or two I gave the men orders to return it, which they did most gallantly. We cannot say whether we wounded or killed any, but I can say that not one of my men was touched, even in his clothes. This is miraculous, as we were exposed on the upper deck of one of the canal propellers without a particle of protection, unless the smoke-pipe may be considered one. Not a man flinched, and, with one exception, they watched my eye and did not fire or move a muscle until ordered. In the instant of firing, by order of Captain Flusser, U. S. Navy* (who commanded the expedition), I had the American flag raised. The three men designated for that duty laid down their pieces and hoisted the banner beautifully. We gave it three cheers and went at it again. Our boys are much pleased with their trip. Several articles will be put in print about this, the first firing in Virginia. I have no doubt they will draw it pretty steep, so make a discount on what they write. By a singular coincidence the propeller upon which we were is named the William Woodward. I enclose a list of the men who were with me. I have written in a hurry and of course in some little excitement, as all the men are still cheering or talking around me. The ink used I found on board the prize, and have written you the first account of our success from that bottle.

Yours affectionately,

JNO. B. WOODWARD,

Lieut. U. S. A.

P. S.—I forgot to mention that returning we overhauled a schooner, which turned out all right, and we were in turn overhauled by a government vessel which cruises off the Potomac. The latter incident made much excitement, as we feared, on her approach, that she might be a Secessionist vessel ordered to recapture our prize."

APPENDIX "B."

A Brilliant Capture.

HOW FOUR COMPANIES OF THE THIRTY-THIRD NEW YORK INFANTRY
CORRALLED THE SEVENTH AND EIGHTH GEORGIA REGIMENTS.
AT THE BATTLE OF GOLDING'S FARM, VA.

APPENDIX "B."

A BRILLIANT CAPTURE.

HOW FOUR COMPANIES OF THE THIRTY-THIRD NEW YORK INFANTRY
CORRALLED THE SEVENTH AND EIGHTH GEORGIA REGIMENTS.
AT THE BATTLE OF GOLDING'S FARM, VA.

In his report of the battle of Golding's Farm, Va., which occurred June 28, 1862, General J. W. Davidson, commanding Third Brigade, Second Division, Sixth Army Corps, stated that the Seventh and Eighth Georgia Regiments "were handsomely repulsed" by the Thirty-third New York Infantry, Colonel Taylor commanding, in conjunction with the Forty-ninth Pennsylvania. The facts in the case do not substantiate the report of the commanding general, as will be seen by the subjoined correspondence. As a matter of fact, the credit for this work belongs exclusively to the Thirty-third New York, who not only "repulsed" but captured the Seventh Georgia with its commanding officer, Lieutenant-Colonel John R. Towers, and the Eighth Georgia with its colonel, L. M. Lamar.

The episode reflects the greatest credit upon the Thirty-third and is well worth exploiting. Three surviving officers of the regiment have furnished this office with statements concerning this affair; General George Murray Guion, who was then the senior captain of the regiment and subsequently colonel of the One Hundred and Forty-eighth New York, and who is now living in Chicago; Bernard Byrne, of Seneca Falls, who was a lieutenant in Company K, and Major Pryce W. Bailey, also of Seneca Falls. It will be noted that while the officers agree in the main, there are several discrepancies in the matter of detail:

July 28th, 1897.

DEAR SIR.—Your favor of the 23d asking for information in regard to reported action of Lieutenant E. J. Tyler, Company "A," Twenty-third New York, at the battle of Golding's Farm, on the 28th June, 1862, is at hand.

Lieut. Bliss in his account of that action has exaggerated the part taken by Lieutenant Tyler—not but what he would have made the attempt to "capture the Eighth Georgia" had opportunity offered, for he was a brave, dashing and capable officer—but the circumstances were as follows:

The battle of Mechanicsville was fought on Friday, June 27th. On the morning of the 28th the Thirty-third, with the exception of the convalescents and camp guards who were left to strike tents and secure baggage preparatory to the general retrograde movement, was ordered on picket with two companies of the Forty-ninth Pennsylvania, at Golding's Farm.

This force had hardly reached the picket line before the Confederates opened a heavy artillery fire, which was mainly concentrated upon the camp. The camp guard, and all others left in camp under command of Lieutenant Tyler, who was at that time acting Adjutant, were immediately rallied by him under the galling fire of the guns and promptly moved forward to the line of breastworks previously erected by the Thirty-third in the immediate front of its camp. For his promptness and coolness under severe fire in accomplishing this movement, Lieutenant Tyler was especially commended by Colonel Taylor in his report of the engagement. The fire from the batteries continued about an hour and then suddenly ceased. The Thirty-third and the two companies of the Forty-ninth were now fiercely attacked by two full regiments of infantry. The men stood their ground at first, but were eventually forced back to the breastwork, where a most gallant stand was made. The Confederates flushed with their first success and confident of capturing the line of works now charged furiously and with great determination, but were repulsed and driven back with heavy loss. Again reforming, the enemy charged a second time but were met by a heavy fire and compelled to retreat in great disorder. Once more with persistent bravery the Confederate lines reformed, and gallantly led by Colonel Lamar, who commanded the attacking force, made a final charge upon the breastwork and were for the third time forced back and driven from the field just as a section of Mott's battery* came up and got an enflading fire on the retreating force. Our loss was somewhat severe during the early part of the engagement, and included a number of prisoners.

Among the latter was Captain Hamilton, of Company "G," who was afterwards exchanged. Lieutenant Church, of Company "E," was among the killed. He was a brave and efficient officer, and was buried near the spot where he fell.

The two regiments making the attack were the Seventh and Eighth Georgia, and their losses were 90 killed and left upon the field, a large number wounded, 50 prisoners, including the wounded Colonel Lamar, of the Eighth, and Lieutenant-Colonel John R. Towers, of the Seventh Georgia, and 200 stand of arms.

During the cannonading, immediately after the repulse of the first charge, a live shell fell in the ranks of Company "A," behind the breastwork. Private J. W. Hendricks of that company immediately seized the shell and threw it over the parapet, where it burst.

General Davidson, commanding the brigade, in his report of the battle, says: "The Thirty-third New York Volunteers, Colonel Taylor, of my brigade, then on picket, in conjunction with two companies of the Forty-ninth Pennsylvania, Colonel Irwin, had the honor of repulsing the enemy most handsomely. The conduct of the Thirty-third—under this terrible concentrated fire, which took us completely by surprise, was all that could be desired."

On the morning of the 29th companies "A" and "F" were ordered on picket to deceive and hold in check the enemy while the remainder of the troops were withdrawn, General Smith, in giving the order, saying "it is the duty of the few to sacrifice themselves for the safety of the many."

After holding the line for some hours, closely pressed by the enemy, the two companies were finally signalled to retire, and withdrew under cover of the fog, rejoining the regiment in time to participate in the engagement at Savage's Station.

My recollection of events connected with the history of the Thirty-third is very clear, and it will afford me much pleasure to be of any further service to you.

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed.) GEO. MURRAY GUION.

Bernard Byrne, late lieutenant, Company K, Thirty-third New York, now of Seneca Falls, writes as follows in regard to this subject:

SENECA FALLS, N. Y., August —, 1897.

Hon. HUGH HASTINGS, State Historian, Albany, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR.—With pleasure I will endeavor to give you, to the best of my ability, the details of the capture of Colonel Lamar and the Eighth Georgia Regiment by the Thirty-third New York, at Golding's Farm, June 28, 1862.

The camp of the Thirty-third was located in an open field. About three hundred yards (300 yds.) in our front there was a belt of woods with a deep gully in its center. This gully was the outlet of a deep swamp emptying into the Chickahominy. We had to cross this gully to reach the picket line, which was in the edge of the wood and not more than two hundred (200) feet from the enemy's pickets.

On June 28th the Thirty third was ordered to relieve the picket-line, which order we obeyed, leaving a camp-guard of 32 men under the command of Lieutenant Lucius C. Mix. Acting Adjutant Edwin J. Tyler also remained in camp to secure baggage, etc., preparatory to retreating.

The regiment advanced as ordered; the six right companies dug up a position on the bank of the Chickahominy, to our left and right, to guard against a flank movement of the enemy; the four left companies advanced and relieved the picket-line. I was posted with my company to guard a road constructed by the enemy, through the edge of the swamp, with orders to hold it at all hazards. We had hardly reached the picket-line when the Confederates opened a heavy artillery fire from twenty pieces. Shot and shell flew in every direction, crashing through the trees and tearing up the ground all about us. Later we received orders from General Smith (Baldy) to fall back to our breastworks when the artillery fire would cease; but the firing continued for a full hour. Under cover of the underbrush and high river bank the enemy got in the rear of our picket-line. My attention was first called to this fact by shots, fired to my right and rear, that came from the enemy's skirmishers as they advanced through the underbrush. I faced my company to meet the emergency and fired two volleys into the advancing foe; this checked their progress and brought our picket-line to their feet. This move of the enemy cut off the six right companies and prevented their participating in the engagement. The four left companies fell back, contesting every inch of the ground, wheeling and firing as they retreated. As we reached our breastworks every man wheeled to face the enemy. On this occasion our mode of firing was: the rear rank sat down and emptied their cartridges on the ground, at their right hand, and loaded for the front rank, which remained standing. In this position we calmly awaited the approach of the foe.

On they came, the Seventh and Eighth Georgia, led by the gallant Lamar. As they advanced, there instantly shot forth from behind our breastworks a sheet of flame, followed by another and another, until staggered by the galling fire the rebels wavered, broke and fled in great disorder from the field. Not satisfied with the reception they had received, the Confederates reformed and again advanced, though more cautiously than at first; but they were again met by a murderous fire and compelled to fall back, leaving many of their number on the field. Maddened by the defeat and carnage which had overtaken him, Colonel Lamar sprang in front of his men and waving his sword and hat incited them to a renewal of the attack. Over a hundred rifles were instantly leveled at him and he fell dangerously wounded. At this opportune moment a section of Captain Mott's battery, which had come up, opened an enflading fire from the left and the victory was complete. Lieutenant-Colonel Towers, of the Seventh Georgia, raised a white flag and we ceased firing. A small party went out and brought in the prisoners, including Colonel Lamar and Lieutenant-Colonel Towers. The latter officer was surprised to find so few men in our rifle-pits. He said he expected to find at least two regiments. He also said: "If my hat would hold bullets, I could have filled it where I was."

This attempt of the Seventh and Eighth Georgia Regiments to capture the Thirty-third New York, resulted in their losing 91 men killed and left on the field, a large number of wounded and 50 prisoners, including a colonel and lieutenant-colonel, and 200 stand of arms. We lost several in killed and wounded during the first part of the engagement. When forced back to the intrenchments a number were taken prisoners, including Captain Theodore B. Hamilton, of Company G. Lieutenant Moses Church, of Company E, was killed in the breastworks. From my recollection of the engagement, our loss, all told, would not exceed 20 or 25 officers and enlisted men.

Immediately after the repulse, the six right companies marched into camp without losing a man. We then established a new picket-line, which we held until the morning of the 29th, when we fell back, under cover of a dense fog and joined our brigade. Our division acted as rear guard during the retreat to Harrison's Landing. This terminated the battle of Golding's Farm.

I have conferred with several members of my old company, who still live in Seneca Falls. It always gives me great pleasure to meet with them and fight the battles over again. What surprised them most, was when I told them of the capture of Colonel Lamar and the Eighth Georgia by Lieutenant Edwin J. Tyler and four companies of the Thirty-third. The history of the regiment, speaking of the battle, says that Lieutenant Lucius C. Mix and Lieutenant Edwin J. Tyler, of Company A, succeeded, under a galling fire, in collecting and placing in good order, the former his camp-guard, and the latter all others in camp—some fifty men, which leaves Lieutenant Tyler to have 18 men in his command, 10 company cooks and 8 others. I don't think for a moment that such a force could ever capture Colonel Lamar and the Seventh and Eighth Georgia Regiments.

Lieutenant Tyler was a good officer; he was in his proper place as acting adjutant. He was, with the aid of the camp-guards and others, to strike tents and secure baggage, etc., preparatory to retreating. The enemy struck tents for us; but not until they had received a good slashing with our jack-knives.

On the night of the 28th, the regiment was again detailed to reinforce the picket-line. Captain Guion, of Company A; Captain (James M.) McNair, of Company F; Lieutenant (Reuben C.) Niles, of Company H, and Lieutenant (Bernard) Byrne, of Company K, were of the detail. We had at this time abandoned our camp. McNair and Niles went on the line, Guion and Byrne remained in camp and destroyed everything of value, in the way of camp equipage. When relieved from the picket-line, Captain McNair, with a squad of men, in obedience to orders from General Davidson, destroyed everything of value in the remainder of the brigade camps.

At this late date, the only feeling I have in the matter is a pride in the fact that I had the great honor of being a member of the Thirty-third Regiment, and of being a participant in so glorious an engagement, where every officer and man did his full duty.

In concluding, I would say that there are seven or eight men, members of my old company and respected citizens of this village, who are ready and willing to verify every particular of the foregoing statement. I hereby present the name of Thomas Casey as one of the members.

Trusting you may find some useful information in the above report, I have the honor to remain,

Very sincerely yours,

BERNARD BYRNE,

Late Lieutenant, Co. K, 33d N. Y. Inf.

HUGH HASTINGS, Esq., State Historian, Albany, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR.—In compliance with your request of the 28th inst., for my version of the fight at Golding's Farm, Va., June 28th, 1862, I wish to state that I was at that time serving on the staff of General John W. Davidson, who commanded the brigade consisting of the Thirty-third, Forty-ninth and Seventy-seventh New York Volunteers and the Seventh Maine Regiment. It was known as the Third Brigade of the Second Division, Sixth Army Corps. This brigade had held the position on the south side of the Chickahominy since June 5th, known as Camp Lincoln, on what was called Golding's Farm. It had constructed one redoubt and a double line of rifle-pits and had proven their utility and strength in several small fights during the month. We were confronted by what we knew as the Georgia Brigade, consisting of the Seventh, Eighth and Tenth Georgia Regiments and one regiment of Virginians. A very friendly feeling existed between the men of the opposing forces; to such an extent was this so that an agreement was entered into stipulating that each should warn the other when the armistice was to sever and hostilities begin. It was on the 26th of June, I believe, that notice was given by the Georgians that all civilities must be suspended. Then began the hard fighting on our right at Mechanicsville by Fitz John Porter and McCall.

The enemy attacked on our front, evidently to prevent the withdrawal of any troops to reinforce General Porter, and, to that extent, was successful.

On the night of the 27th we were ordered to make a noisy demonstration, presumably to impress the enemy in our front with the idea that, as the bulk of Porter's Corps had crossed to our side of the swamp, a stand would there be made on the morrow by the whole army of the Potomac. Instead of that, an entirely opposite move was contemplated, which later in the night became evident.

Orders were received from the division commander, General W. F. (Baldy) Smith, to the effect that the brigade should destroy all heavy camp equipage and hold its line as long as possible. The army was to be withdrawn from its position in front of Richmond, and our brigade was to be the rear guard until the hospital, with its army of sick and wounded, and supply depot at Savage Station, could be cared for and a new temporary defensive line could be adopted. In the performance of this duty, the brigade took possession of its rifle-pits and made preparations to hold that line as long as there were any men to fight or orders to withdraw received.

In front of the left of the Thirty-third was a narrow roadway which had been made through the swamp for the troops to pass to and from the advanced picket-line. On the right of this road a swamp gently declined through low lands to the Chickahominy, over which was a bridge that was deemed of considerable importance because there yet remained thousands of Porter's Corps on the north side, the scene of the previous two days' hard fighting. General Smith had ordered strenuous resistance to any movement on the part of the enemy in the direction of that bridge. He well knowing that no sortie in force could be made in our front, except by way of the road before mentioned, had ordered it covered by Mott's New York Battery, supported by the Seventy-seventh and Forty-ninth Regiments. In the gray of the morning of the 28th, a portion of the Georgian brigade began a movement on their extreme left, in the direction of the bridge, with the view to capture it and thus prevent the escape of any more of Porter's men. Six companies of the Thirty-third were detached to drive them back, which was successfully done after some hard fighting on both sides. About the time this move was checked, a strong force, which proved to be the Seventh and Eighth Georgia Regiments, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Towers and Colonel Lamar, respectively, vigorously advanced en masse by the roadway. The Thirty-third being divided, its field officers being with the main portion, with a considerable distance intervening, the captains of the four left companies, feeling the extreme urgency for the best efforts of every man and a determination to hold their line, sent word to Acting Adjutant Lieutenant Edwin J. Tyler, of Company A, to bring up reinforcements as rapidly as possible, if any could be got. Tyler, acting with his usual impetuous gallantry, turned out every man, camp-guards, cooks, sick and convalescents, and marched them to the front at double-quick step. The batteries opened fire; the infantry, encouraged by Tyler's bravery and prompt action, concentrated such a fire upon the advancing Georgians as resulted in the annihilation of the Eighth and the capture of the greater portion of the Seventh. Each of the four companies captured more than their own numbers, including in their prisoners Lamar and Towers.

The four companies were E, K, G and B, commanded by Captains (Wilson B.) Warford, (Patrick) McGraw, (Theodore B.) Hamilton and (Alexander H.) Drake, respectively.

The Thirty-third Regiment always did its whole duty. The battle of Golding's Farm was one of the places where it did more than was expected of any command, viz., captured more prisoners than their own numbers. The conspicuous gallantry of Lieutenant Tyler contributed more to the grand result than anything else possibly could.

Very truly yours,

PRYCE W. BAILEY.

THE SIXTY-NINTH REGIMENT AT FREDERICKSBURG.

GENERAL NUGENT'S DESCRIPTION OF THE SPLENDID WORK THAT WAS PERFORMED BY THE IRISH BRIGADE BEFORE
MARYE'S HEIGHTS, DECEMBER 11-15, 1862.

In spite of the exceedingly creditable record made by the Sixty-ninth Regiment at the battle of Fredericksburg, Va., in December, 1862, the only mention found in the Official Records of the Rebellion is contained in the subjoined paragraph—the only official report made for the regiment, by Captain James Saunders:

"In compliance with general orders received December 2, I hereby certify that the Sixty-ninth Regiment, New York Volunteers, entered the battle of Fredericksburg, on December 13, 1862, commanded by Colonel Robert Nugent, and 18 commissioned officers and 210 rank and file, in which the above numbered regiment lost 16 commissioned officers and 160 rank and file, leaving Captain James Saunders, Lieutenant (Robert H.) Milliken and Lieutenant L. (Luke) Brennan to bring the remnant of the regiment off the battle-field."

The fact has been established that the bodies of men from this organization, with sprigs of boxwood in their hats, were found nearest the stone wall at Marye's Heights. The following entertaining and instructive narrative from the pen of General Robert Nugent, U. S. A., was written at the request of this office, to fill a historical gap.

GENERAL NUGENT'S NARRATIVE.

Some thirty-six years ago the first regiment of an Irish Brigade took departure from the great metropolis, to the National Capital, to engage in a conflict on the very threshold of a great internecine war that was to determine the destinies of this great Republic.

On arriving at Washington on the morning of the 20th of November, 1861, we pitched tents just outside the confines of the city, encamping on a beautiful knoll christened "Camp Corcoran," in honor of that distinguished soldier, Michael Corcoran, then a prisoner at Libby Prison.

The organization of the Sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, the First Regiment of the Brigade had its full complement of officers numbering thirty-eight, with rank and file of one thousand souls, the best the Irish brawn could furnish, eager for the fray. Here we remained encamped until the 30th of November following, when, in obedience to orders from the War Department, we broke camp and proceeded to report to General Sumner at Camp California, Va., arriving on the 1st day of December, 1861, being soon joined by the Sixty-third and Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, which had come on from New York and were assigned to the brigade.

The establishment of the brigade having been completed, I was ordered by General Sumner to assume command, being the senior colonel in rank. This I did, retaining command until February, 1862, when I was relieved by that illustrious patriot, statesman and soldier, Thomas Francis Meagher, who was commissioned brigadier-general and who then took command, leading it on to victory in many fields of battle, and whose history is written on the escutcheon of every patriot at home and abroad.

In the political organization and existence of nationalities there is always some insignia, some symbol by which their distinctive character is known; so like a nation, for the brigade was the representative of that glorious race which fought so nobly on the fields of Fontenoy, the Irish Brigade was distinguished by its insignia, its red trefoil, its green feather, and above all by its glorious standard, the flag of its adopted country, the Stars and Stripes, which we carried successfully through so many battles, unstained by the hand of the enemy, and the tattered remnants now in the Armory of the Sixty-ninth Regiment are the only vestiges of what remain to exemplify the deeds of fallen comrades, the memory of which exalts us to the highest pitch of patriotism. The brigade remained at Camp California until the 10th day of March, 1862, when the Army of the Potomac moved on to Manassas under command of that gallant soldier, the late General George B. McClellan.

The army did not meet the enemy at Manassas and returned to Alexandria, embarking for Fortress Monroe, thence up the York river to Ship Point, thence to Yorktown. The Siege of Yorktown was this brigade's baptism of fire. Fair Oaks came next. A few days after this battle, the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts was assigned to the brigade. The brigade was then known as the Second Irish Brigade, First Division, Second Corps, and served in the First Division from its organization in December, 1861, until its final muster-out of service June, 1865, ending of the war, commanded respectively by such famous soldiers as Sumner, Richardson, Caldwell, Barlow and Miles, the present commander of the United States Army, and as Colonel William F. Fox, in his most interesting history of the regimental losses, says: "Any regiment following the fortunes of these men was sure to find plenty of bloody work cut out for it." And again he says: "But the hardest fighting and greatest loss of life occurred in the First Division of the Second Corps, Hancock's old division, in which more men were killed and wounded in the Union Army, east or west. It was in this division the Irish Brigade served from its organization in 1861, until April, 1865;" and so it was, for the brigade took part in the Siege of Yorktown, the battles of Fair Oaks, Gaines Mill, Savage Station, Peach Orchard, White Oak Swamp, Glendale, Malvern Hill and Antietam, so that when the Second Corps arrived at Falmouth, in front of Fredericksburg, November 17th, 1862, the ranks of the brigade were very much depleted from the great losses sustained by the brigade in each of the above-named battles. The One Hundred and Sixteenth Pennsylvania was assigned to the brigade at Harper's Ferry early in October, 1862, and shortly after the brigade arrived at Falmouth the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts took the place of the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts, the Twenty-ninth being transferred to the Ninth Corps. The Twenty-eighth Massachusetts was originally organized for the Irish Brigade, but by some mistake it was ordered to Port Royal and did not join the brigade until this time.

In a short sketch of this character, where I can only narrate some of the salient features of famous battles which have been chronicled in the Nation's history, I must, therefore, pass over the many details which go to make up movements of great armies and content myself with general operations only and results necessarily following them.

History records with astonishing accuracy the fatal and disastrous losses occurring in great battles, which of themselves bring about little or no permanent conclusions, or such results from which one would naturally suppose that lasting and effectual cessations of difficulties had been accomplished, and so it was with the battle of Fredericksburg, or the assault made on Marye's (Murye's) Heights.

The Army of the Potomac had been resting at Falmouth from the 17th of November to the 13th December, 1862, when the attack was made. The army as thus organized was composed of three grand divisions, the right consisting of the Second and Ninth Corps, under command of General Sumner; the center consisting of the Third and Fifth Corps, under command of General Hooker; and the left, consisting of the First and Sixth Corps, under command of General Franklin, and all under command of General Burnside, the whole making a grand aggregation of nearly or about one hundred thousand men. As thus prepared we waited with much eagerness for the orders for the attack. That portion of the field of Fredericksburg upon which the Irish Brigade fought on the 13th December 1862, lies south of the city and is known as Marye's Heights. It was occupied by the Confederates in several lines of rifle-pits different elevations, and the top or crest was garnished with artillery. At the base or foot of the heights there runs a stone wall, and behind this was posted a strong force of infantry. From the point where the brigade formed its line of battle to this stone wall is a quarter of a mile. The ground inclines in a gentle ascent throughout the whole distance. Now the slope between the point where the brigade formed its line of battle and the stone wall constitutes the battle-field. The scene presented an impenetrable barrier, an impregnable fort, a veritable Chinese wall. Previous to the attack and before the final orders were given to advance on the works, General Hancock, then in command of the First Division, Second Corps, sent for all the colonels of the First Division, some fourteen in number, and thus addressed them: "Gentlemen, I have called you together for the purpose of communicating to you the orders of the commanding general. They are imperative and must be carried out at all hazards and at all costs."

Describing how the battle would be opened he said:

"General French's Division would lead the advance, supported by his division, Zook's Brigade supporting French, the Irish Brigade supporting Zook, and Caldwell's Brigade supporting the Irish Brigade, and if one or either line should fail the other should pass on and over and so on until the works of the enemy were carried, advising, however, that all mounted officers should go in on foot, as we were going to have a severe struggle, and that scarcely a pigeon could live through it."

When the general had finished his short address the fourteen colonels shook each other by the hand, many of them for the last time. The gallant Cross of the Fifth New Hampshire was standing alongside of me and on my right; turning around and taking him by the hand I said: "Cross, we are going to have hot work to-day, but if you get into Richmond before I do, order dinner at the Spottswood House and I will dine with you."

Cross who was a good fellow and a very gallant soldier, a little profane at times, replied to me in very strong and emphatic terms, "So and so, Nugent we are."

We did not carry the works, we did not get into Richmond that day, the dinner has never been ordered, as both Cross and myself were wounded. In his next fight, Gettysburg, the brave and gallant soldier gave up his life for his country's cause.

As soon as the colonels of the division had bade each other goodby, they returned to their respective regiments. Knowing what General Hancock expected of each one, I went along the stacks of muskets of my regiment to find out what I had to support me in the coming struggle, that was so soon to follow.

While in the act of counting the muskets, Father Willett, chaplain of the Sixty-ninth, came up to me and asked me if he could go along the line and say a word to the men. I replied, "certainly, Father, and if you will wait a moment until I finish counting the muskets of the regiment I will go with you."

Finishing the counting I found I had 214, of which I will refer to later, and accompanied the Father to the right of the regiment. Although not a Catholic myself, I was the first man to receive the good Father's blessing. He then went along the line blessing each man, Catholic and Protestant alike, and these men went into the fight as cheerfully as they would into a ball-room. As soon as the Father had finished his religious duties to the regiment, placed in his hat a sprig of boxwood which I had received from General Meagher, telling the men of the regiment that I would make an Irishman out of the Father that day—the good Father being a French Canadian.

It was the happy thought of General Meagher that morning that each man of the brigade should wear a sprig of boxwood in his cap so that in case he fell on the battle-field, the sprig would indicate he was a member of the Irish Brigade; and as so suggested by the General, each man was furnished with a sprig of green. It is a well known fact, it is a matter of history, that the men wearing the sprig of green were found lying dead very close, very close indeed, in front of the celebrated stone wall.*

The brigade finally received the order to advance from the town or city of Fredericksburg, marching by the flank, the Sixty-ninth

* Within twelve yards of the wall, according to Confederate authorities.—STATE HISTORIAN

Colonel Nugent, on the right, the Eighty-eighth, Colonel Patrick Kelly, second in line, the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts, Colonel (Richard) Byrnes, third in line, the Sixty-third New York, Major (Joseph) O'Neill, fourth in line, and the One Hundred and Sixteenth Pennsylvania, Colonel (Dennis) Heenan, fifth in line, crossing the canal or mill-race, which runs in rear of the city, by a narrow bridge. The Sixty-ninth and Eighty-eighth advanced beyond the bridge about one hundred yards and filed to the right and halted, the other regiments forming on the left of the Eighty-eighth by the command on the right by file into line.

Thus the line of battle of the brigade was completed, and during its formation it was under a terrific fire from the enemy's artillery, they having a perfect range of the bridge over which the brigade had crossed. Here we remained a short time awaiting the final orders to make the attack on the works of the enemy, and while waiting, an aid from General Hancock came on the ground with an order to General Meagher, to send two companies of the Sixty-ninth out a short distance to the right, where we had formed, to protect a knoll, lest the enemy should make his appearance in that direction. On receiving this order from General Meagher I ordered the two companies under command of Captain James Saunders, to proceed to this point. These two companies numbered forty-six men and three officers, Captain Saunders, Lieutenant (Robert H.) Milliken and Lieutenant Brennan, remaining in this position most of the day and did not accompany the regiment while the brigade made its famous charge on the celebrated stone wall. As soon as these companies were posted, the brigade advanced to the support of French's division, and the brigade of Zook, who had preceded the Irish Brigade. General Meagher gave the order for the advance, and in his report of the battle, says: "Thus formed, under the unabating tempest of shot and shell, the Irish Brigade advanced at the double-quick against the rifle-pits, the breast-works, and batteries of the enemy. I myself ordered the advance, encouraged the line, and urged it on; but owing to a most painful ulcer in the knee-joint, which I had concealed and borne up against for days, I was compelled, with a view to be of any further service to the brigade that day, to return over the plowed field over which we had advanced from the mill-race. I did so to get my horse, which had been left at the head of street from which our column had debouched, in care of my orderlies, along with the other horses of the field and staff officers of the brigade, Brigadier-General Hancock having suggested that it would be advisable for all such officers to act on foot. * * * Passing down the slope, and through crowds of slain and wounded, I reached the spot where I had left my horse and mounted him. Having mounted, I started with one of my orderlies to rejoin the brigade on the right, and with that view took the street across which the two companies of the Sixty-ninth under Captain James Saunders, a staunch and fearless officer, had been deployed as skirmishers. I had not proceeded many paces up this street, before I met the remnant of the Sixty-third, bearing the regimental colors, coming toward me, under the command of Captain Gleeson, one of the bravest and most reliable officers of the brigade. With these few survivors of the Sixty-third were a portion of the Sixty-ninth."

I have stated that where the brigade formed its line of battle to the stone wall is a quarter of a mile, and constituted the battle-field. The brigade advanced at the double-quick, and was met by a most murderous fire from the artillery, rifle-pits, and stone wall of the Confederates. Passing over dead and dying of those brave fellows of French and Zook, the brigade charged, and kept its line of battle as perfect as was possible under such a galling fire. As the men dropped or fell when shot, the line kept closing in, not a man faltered, charged up to and over the last fence within thirty or forty yards of the stone wall, and by the time the brigade reached this point, had lost hundreds of its gallant fellows.

The fight was terrific; no pen can describe the horrors of this battle. The casualties were enormous. It was a living hell from which escape seemed scarcely possible. I was myself carried off the field, having been shot through the right side. I was leading the charge.

By virtue of the commanding position of the enemy no attack could have been successful. It was not thirty minutes from the time the brigade sprang forward with a yell to the time when broken and routed, what was left of it fell back upon the city, and it was here met by General Meagher at the head of the street where the column had debouched. The General was unable to lead the brigade on foot in the charge, as he intended, but by the time he had reached his horse the brigade had made its fight and was almost annihilated.

General Francis A. Walker in his history of the Second Corps reports that, Inspector-General Morgan, Second Corps, and Colonel John R. Brooke, Fifty-third Pennsylvania, now Major General U. S. A., who had charge of the detachment detailed to bury the dead a few days after the battle, have stated that the bodies found nearest the stone wall were men of the Sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, Fifth New Hampshire and Fifty-third Pennsylvania. The Sixty-ninth on marching from the city to where the line of battle was formed, had nineteen officers and two hundred and fourteen muskets, as before stated, with five non-commissioned staff, making in all two hundred and nineteen enlisted men. The two companies under Captain Saunders detached from the regiment at this point, numbered forty-six men and three officers, left with the regiment one hundred and seventy-three enlisted men and sixteen officers to go directly into the fight, and out of this number engaged with the enemy, one hundred and twelve men were killed and wounded, leaving sixty-one enlisted men to come out of the fight unharmed; of the sixteen officers two were killed, Lieutenants (Andrew) Birmingham and (John) Conway, and fourteen wounded, so that not an officer of the sixteen who went into the fight but was either killed or wounded. And it was a most fortunate circumstance for the regiment that the two companies under Captain Saunders were so detached, for with them and the sixty-one enlisted men who escaped unharmed from the fight, were all the regiment had for duty next day.

Among the wounded were Major (James) Cavanagh, Captains (Thomas) Leddy, (John H.) Donovan, Lieutenant (Patrick)

Kearney and Colonel Nugent. Such is the record of the Sixty-ninth at the battle of Fredericksburg.

The Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, Colonel Patrick Kelly, took into the fight twenty-three officers and two hundred twenty enlisted men; had four officers killed, Major William Hogan, Lieutenants Thomas Murphy, Daniel McCarthy, John R. Young, and eight wounded; and of the enlisted men, one hundred and fifteen were killed and wounded.

The Sixty-third New York Volunteers, Major O'Neill, took into the fight seventeen officers and one hundred and forty-five enlisted men; had one officer killed, Captain (John) Sullivan, and seven wounded; among the wounded were Major O'Neill and Adjutant (Miles) McDonald; and of the enlisted men thirty-seven were killed and wounded.

The Twenty-eighth Massachusetts, Colonel Byrnes, took into the fight sixteen officers and four hundred enlisted men; had three officers killed, Lieutenants Edwin J. Weller, John Sullivan and William Holland, and four wounded; among the wounded was Major Caraher; and one hundred and forty-nine enlisted men killed and wounded.

The One Hundred and Sixteenth Pennsylvania, Colonel Heenan, took into the fight seventeen officers and two hundred and thirty enlisted men; had one officer killed, Lieutenant Christian Foltz and eleven wounded; among the wounded were Colonel Heenan and Lieutenant-Colonel Mulholland; and seventy-seven enlisted men killed and wounded.

From the Siege of Yorktown up to and including the battle of Fredericksburg, Dec'r 13th, 1862, there were killed and wounded in officers ninety-six, and in enlisted men fifteen hundred and twenty-one, making a total of sixteen hundred and seventeen.

The brigade participated in no less than thirty-four battles throughout the war, and had enlisted in its organization no less than seven thousand men. When at the cessation of hostilities it reached New York, its number was less than one thousand. What a magnificent record to be handed down to future generations. Not at Balaklava nor at Fontenoy was greater heroism displayed, by men whose military genius and bravery is known throughout the civilized world, than was displayed at the celebrated stone wall on Marye's Heights at Fredericksburg, the Bloody Lane at Antietam, and the repulse of the courageous Tenth Louisianans at Malvern Hill.

Meagher, Byrnes, Kelly, Smith, McGee, Burke and Nugent were from time to time its commanders. Meagher, whose distinguished services at home and abroad are so well known that time cannot obliterate them; Byrnes of the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts, brave and gallant soldier, was killed at Cold Harbor on the 3d of June, 1864; Kelly, the faithful, honest and true soldier, was killed a few days after in front of Petersburg on June 16th, 1864; and the gallant and dashing soldier, General Tom Smythe was the last general officer of the Army of the Potomac that was killed, on the picket-line April 6th, 1865, while in command of his brigade of the Second Division, Second Corps; McGee, that fearless soldier, died of wounds received in front of Petersburg; and of the regimental commanders Burke rose from the lowest rung of the ladder to the top for gallant conduct on every field, is gone.

From Yorktown to Appomattox the same old spirit prevailed that characterized the Irish soldier the world over—full of fun, full of frolic, and full of fight. It was a noble brigade, it was a grand brigade, magnificently officered, perfectly disciplined, on the march, in camp, or in battle, it was ever cheerful and brave, ready to respond to the bugle call. General Hancock, our gallant corps commander, had often said to me, that the Irish Brigade never knew when to disobey an order. The Sixty-ninth stands at the head of the New York infantry regiments, having lost more men killed and mortally wounded in action, than any regiment from the State. It is a grand and glorious record. It needs no words of praise. Its name will live in history. Its record was unsurpassed. I know of no greater compliment to bestow upon this noble brigade than to assign it to a place upon the endearing escutcheon of fame along with the Light Brigade at Balaklava.

THE EIGHTY-NINTH INFANTRY AT FREDERICKSBURG.

ONE HUNDRED VOLUNTEERS CROSS THE RAPPAHANNOCK IN BOATS, CAPTURE CONFEDERATE SHARPSHOOTERS AND THUS INSURE THE LAYING OF THE PONTOON BRIDGES.

The Eighty-ninth New York Volunteer Infantry has never received the credit it was entitled to for its patriotic services at the first battle of Fredericksburg, Va. Early on the morning of the 11th of December, 1862, the Eighty-ninth, Colonel Harrison S. Fairchild commanding, was placed in position on the north bank of the Rappahannock river, opposite the old steamboat landing.

A detachment from the Fiftieth New York Engineers, under command of Major Ira Spaulding, was trying to lay a pontoon bridge near the Lacy House, but the hot fire of the enemy's sharpshooters seriously impeded their efforts. After two-thirds of the bridge had been laid across the narrow stream, the engineers were driven from their work and Captain Augustus S. Perkins was killed by the Confederate sharpshooters, who occupied the buildings on the south side of the river. A number of attempts were made to complete the work, but in every instance the Union troops were shot down or driven back.

Realizing the hopelessness of completing the bridge while the sharpshooters controlled the southern bank, General Burnside ordered Colonel Fairchild to detail four officers and one hundred men from his command, which had been in position from 2 o'clock in the morning till 4 o'clock in the afternoon, to cross the river in pontoon boats, drive out the sharpshooters and take possession of the houses. General George W. Getty, who commanded the Third Division of the Ninth Army Corps, to which the Eighty-ninth was attached, in his official report says: "This order was most gallantly carried into effect."

The detail was in command of the following officers: Captain Frank Burt, of K Company; Captain James Hazley, of B Company; Captain Seymour L. Judd, of G Company, and First Lieutenant Wellington M. Lewis, of H Company.

Each command consisted of a detachment of twenty-five men who occupied a boat. The crossing was covered by the fire of the Union batteries, and of regiments drawn up in line along the river bank. One of the survivors, in recalling the incident, writes: "We all expected to be killed before we reached the shore."

The boats were pushed hastily across, the intrepid troops sprang out and in a very brief time took possession of the houses and captured sixty-four prisoners, including four commissioned officers.

General Rush C. Hawkins, who commanded the brigade, in his official report said: "Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the officers and men who so gallantly crossed the river. It was owing to this daring and boldness that our engineers were enabled to complete the bridge, which they had been at work upon since 3 a. m., and I trust that favorable mention will be made of this occurrence, so that it may be known for all time to come who was that performed one of the most daring exploits of the war."

A short time after the detachment had cleared out the sharpshooters, the remainder of the Eighty-ninth crossed the boats. The two detachments were combined and were marched to the main street of the city. Here pickets were thrown out and the regiment bivouacked for the night.

General Orlando B. Willcox, commanding the Ninth Corps of the Army of the Potomac, closes his report of the battle of Fredericksburg with this sentence: "Accompanied herewith is a list of the officers and men of the Eighty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers who crossed the river in boats before referred to."

In preparing the Official Records of the Rebellion, the government compilers were not able to find the list which General Willcox refers to.

This office undertook to find the list. The regiment was raised in the counties of Broome, Chenango, Delaware, Livingston, Monroe and Schuyler. It was known that two of the officers were dead, Captain Judd, who died of wounds, and Lieutenant Lewis. Captain Burt had resigned January 22, 1864, and Captain Hazley was mustered out October 7, 1864. With the co-operation of General James S. Graham, of Rochester, who was then Department Commander of the G. A. R., a paragraph was inserted in General Orders No. 8, of date February 15, 1897, asking the assistance of the survivors to furnish the names. This paragraph was published in the New York Tribune, and was seen by Captain Burt, who had devoted several years after the war to collecting the names of the hundred heroes who crossed the river.

Captain Hazley, who is living at Binghamton, forwarded the names of the twenty-five men of his command. Captain Burt, however, questions the accuracy of Captain Hazley's list. He writes: "The company (Hazley's) was one of the smallest in the regiment. Captain Hazley was not able to give me any list in 1868. The twenty-five names he gives you now must include every member of his company at the time—in fact I think Edward Cafferty did not belong to the company at the time.”

Both lists, however, are printed in connection with the report.

In the efforts to obtain the list, more or less correspondence naturally occurred on the part of this office and survivors of the regiment. A number of the old soldiers agree that General Burnside promised medals of honor to every man who crossed in the boats. At the close of the war Captain Burt opened a correspondence with General Burnside, who promised to have the medals awarded if a list was sent to him of the men who crossed. Captain Burt applied at the War Department, but no trace of the list that had been filed with General Willcox's report was found. Then it was that Captain Burt started in to make a new list. I sent a copy to General Burnside, but Burnside, if ever received the list, paid no attention to the matter. Like General Gibbon's promise of medals to the twenty-five volunteers from the Thirty-fourth New York Infantry, who crossed the same river at the same spot in May, 1863, and drove out the Confederate sharpshooters from the houses in precisely the same manner as the Eighty-ninth had done five months before, nothing ever came of it. If ever men were entitled to medals for heroism under fire, the members of these detachments from the Eighty-ninth in December, 1862, and from the Thirty-fourth Infantry May, 1863, certainly were. Their generals pledged their word, and after the service was rendered the pledge and the word seemed to be forgotten.

Subjoined will be found the list as compiled by Captain Burt:

Unappreciated Services of the Engineers.

TWO NEW YORK REGIMENTS, THE FIFTEENTH AND FIFTIETH, AND GETTYSBURG CAMPAIGNS.

APPENDIX "E."

UNAPPRECIATED SERVICES OF THE ENGINEERS.

TWO NEW YORK REGIMENTS, THE FIFTEENTH AND FIFTIETH, AND THEIR WORK DURING THE CHANCELLORSVILLE AND GETTYSBURG CAMPAIGNS.

The Engineer Corps of the Army of the Potomac has been generally overlooked, primarily because of its diminished numbers, and secondarily because the so-called fighting arms, cavalry, artillery and infantry, have attracted greater attention and monopolized most of the time of military and historical writers and speakers. Nevertheless, the volunteer engineer organizations deserve a very high place in history. It is not generally known that outside of the regular engineers, New York State furnished the only organized body of troops for this scientific department. No better records could be made than those of the First, Fifteenth and Fiftieth New York Engineers.

Owing to the dilatory disposition of General Henry W. Benham of the Regular Army, who was in general command of the engineer forces, two of our New York regiments, the Fifteenth and Fiftieth, have been very much misrepresented and have, to all intents and purposes, been laboring under a cloud since the Chancellorsville campaign. To add to the general embarrassment of the situation, the report of the officer in command of the Volunteer Engineers, Colonel William H. Pettes, which would have shown that the allegations and misrepresentations made against his troops were unjustified, has been lost. This report is mentioned in the Official Records of the Rebellion by General Benham, who states that he has enclosed a copy of it with his report, but unfortunately the report itself does not appear, nor can it be found.

Governed by a determination to vindicate these meritorious organizations from the calumnies that have rested on them, communication was opened by this office with several of the surviving officers, with encouraging results. General headquarters called General Benham to account for his failure to lay the pontoon bridges below Fredericksburg on the morning of April 29. In his explanation to Adjutant-General Williams, General Benham says: "I consider the laying of those five bridges in times ranging from one hour to one hour and forty-five minutes (the bridges extended from 100 to 140 yards apart.—STATE HISTORIAN), as only an instance of signal, if not unprecedented success, which resulted only from the exact compliance with the directions given by, as far as I learned, every officer and man of the Engineer Brigade and the most hearty assistance of that fine officer, General Pratt* and his command, consisting of the excellent officers and men of his brigade and Colonel (Alexander) Shaler's."

At this time the Engineer Brigade consisted of seventeen hundred men, of which three hundred were regular troops, the Fifteenth and Fiftieth averaging about seven hundred men each. During the period of nine days from the time Hooker's army crossed the Rappahannock till it found itself again on the northern bank, fourteen bridges (five of them relays) were placed over the Rappahannock.

* The late Calvin E. Pratt of Brooklyn — STATE HISTORIAN.

General Benham says: "The bridges were, first, a canvas pontoon bridge at Kelly's Ford, about twenty-five miles by the road above Fredericksburg, or twelve in a direct line; three wooden pontoon bridges (one of them made partly of Waterman's pontoons) at the United States Ford, about eighteen miles by road (or ten in right line) above Fredericksburg; two at Banks' Ford, at about four miles above (these brought up from below the city); three at the city (relaid after being taken up from below), and three at about two and a half and two at about five miles below Fredericksburg. By the canvas pontoon train there passed over Stoneman's Cavalry, about nine thousand strong, and this bridge was much approved, as I learn. Over the three bridges at the United States Ford there passed and repassed the bulk of General Hooker's Army, with all its artillery, although the river rose some five feet by a violent rain, which, after preparation for withdrawal had commenced, set in so violently as to break away one or two of the bridges."

Colonel Francis Bacon, of the Fiftieth New York Engineers, now of Waterloo, N. Y., writes to the State Historian under date of April 7th, 1897, as follows, of the services of the engineers during the Chancellorsville campaign:

"Your favor of April 5th at hand, and I have carefully perused the same, and in reply I am glad to have the opportunity to defend the engineer soldiers and officers of the Fifteenth and of the Fiftieth from the cloud under which they have lived, or from under the cloud which exists in regard to the important duties which they performed at the Chancellorsville fight referred to in your letter.

"I have very often during the past twenty-five or thirty years been obliged to defend them when they have been unduly criticised, and am glad that you are interested that posterity should know something of the work which they performed during the Hooker campaign.

"The Engineer Brigade were on hand ready and anxious upon April 29, 1863, to lay the bridge or the bridges which it was their duty to lay, to enable the army to cross the Rappahannock river, and, in my opinion, the delay which ensued in the morning was due to the over cautiousness of Gen. Wadsworth and of Gen. Brooks, and of the conflict of authority at that time; or, perhaps I might better say, to the lack of a clear understanding between them as to the assignment of infantry to protect the engineer forces in carrying the boats from the piece of woods where they had been placed down to the river's bank, to enable them to ferry across the river the men of Gen. Wadsworth Corps.* In my opinion, it would have been very much better to have pushed the boats right to the bank of the river upon the wagons, unloaded them and put them across; that was the idea of all of the officers and their earnest desire, and it was made known to commanding officers at the time, but they were restrained and held back. The delay was, perhaps, a little unfortunate, but the bridge was very quickly built; I was present at the building of the bridge at United States Ford, and I know that those three bridges were built in the night and were built and thrown across in less than thirty minutes. The Official Records do not do the Engineer Brigade justice; at the time that the rain set in, when it was necessary to make one bridge of the three, I know that the men worked for nearly eight hours standing in water, sometimes, where it was almost up to their necks, and which, had they not have done so, would have left Hooker's army there at the mercy of the Confederates, but as fast as the water arose in the Rappahannock river during that flood, and it rose over six feet, they kept adding on to one bridge, kept a passage across the river during the whole of that afternoon and night, and the army was safely crossed back to the north side of the river upon that bridge or a large portion of it, and the same was true of the bridges that were laid at the Lacy House and also up at Kelly's Ford. You are, perhaps, aware that during that campaign they laid, if my memory serves me right, some fourteen bridges, moving their bridges and wagons many times, miles through mud that was almost unfathomable; with those heavy wagons and heavy loads were almost insurmountable obstacles to encounter and to overcome, and but for the extraordinary efforts taken by the Engineer Brigade at that time, would have been extremely disastrous to the Army of the Potomac."

General Edmund O. Beers, late Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fiftieth Regiment, under date of Washington, D. C., April 15, 1897 writes:

"Your letter of the 1st inst. has been forwarded to me here. I am sorry that I cannot put you in a way to obtain a copy of the report of Colonel Pettes, on the battle of Chancellorsville. I presume he made a report of the movements of the regiment, at that time, but I have not the slightest idea what has become of it. He had a son, Captain Fred. Pettes, in the regiment, who was at Nyack, N. Y., the last I knew of him, but I do not think it at all probable that he ever had that report.

"I only know of my own movements at that time. I find, by reference to my diaries, that on the 29th of April, 1863, I built two bridges at what was known as Pollock's Mills, about six miles below Fredericksburg, Va. The movement in that direction was designed as a feint to hold quite a portion of Lee's army in that vicinity, and to keep them away from Chancellorsville. On April 30th, acting under orders, I took up one of the bridges and sent it up to Banks' Ford, with two companies, where the balance of the regiment was at that time. This left me but a portion of one company, just enough to take up the remaining bridge.

"On Saturday, May 2d, I took up the remaining bridge, which I was ordered to do, and to report at Fredericksburg. The enemy were following the last of our troops so closely to cross the river, that I was obliged to cut the up stream cables, swing the bridge, and dismantle it along shore. After the bridge was taken out of the water, I ordered teams down to haul it away, but was informed by the "Johnnies" that mules were too sacred an animal to be used for such purposes, and that we must haul it back by hand, or leave it where it was.

"I moved from Pollock's Mills to opposite Fredericksburg, on the night of May 2d. Before arriving at that point, I was met by an Aide, who had orders for me to lay the bridge near the Lacy house. I unloaded the bridge, got it down to the river—Rappahannock—and commenced laying it, a short time before daylight, Sunday morning, May 3d. There was quite a moon, and I observed the glistening of guns in the rifle-pits on the Fredericksburg side, which I believed to be occupied by the enemy, and so reported to General Gibbon, who was in command of the advance, to cross the river, and asked him to furnish me with a sufficient number of men that I could put across the river in boats, to take possession of the rifle-pits. He did not agree with me, but was of the opinion that our own troops occupied the rifle-pits. However, he took one of my boats—not yet unloaded—with a crew of my best men, and started up towards Falmouth. Before I had gotten all the material down to the river, the enemy fired one volley, and then left. I pushed the bridge to completion, as fast as possible, with the limited number of men I had, and when near the opposite shore the boat General Gibbon had taken made its appearance loaded with men, and landed them.

"As soon as the bridge was completed, General Gibbon moved across and took the different works leading to the heights above Fredericksburg and moved on towards Chancellorsville. On Tuesday, May 5th, I took up this bridge and moved it to near army headquarters, in front of Falmouth. I do not know just what the movements of the balance of the regiment were, except that they were at Banks' Ford and built at least two, if not more, bridges."

In regard to the Gettysburg campaign, General Beers, under date of June 26, 1897, writes:

"As to Gettysburg, there possibly might have been two or three men, who were detailed at army headquarters, as guides present during that battle. Aside from that, none of our regiment participated. I find in my diary, that on Tuesday, June 23, 1863, I was ordered to take seventy-two (72) boats from our camp, near Navy Yard, Washington, D. C., with sufficient material to convert them into a bridge, and to proceed to Edward's Ferry. I made the boats into tows, took them to Georgetown, D. C., and locked them into the Chesapeake and Ohio canal. I left Georgetown at ten o'clock a. m., June 24, 1863, and with mules, towed the fleet up to Edward's Ferry. I arrived at that point, with head of train, at 5 o'clock, a. m., June 25th. Through Captain Turnbull of the U. S. Engineers, I received orders to lay a bridge at that point. I took the boats and material from the canal, and put them into the river. Three companies of the regiment, C, F and I, had preceded me and were awaiting my arrival. Company H, was with the train on the canal; this made four companies. Commenced laying the bridge at 12 o'clock, noon, Thursday, June 25th, completed the same at 2.30 p. m., of that date. The bridge was 1,320 feet long, with 65 pontoon boats. During Thursday afternoon, and Friday, the First, Third, Fifth, Eleventh and Twelfth Corps crossed the bridge, and the Second and Sixth Corps crossed during the night of June 26th and morning of June 27th.

"Commenced dismantling bridge at 5 o'clock, p. m., June 27th, loaded 52 boats and necessary equipage on wagons to go with the army, balance of material, together with a large quantity of quartermaster's stores, were loaded in barges, and made up into tows, and sent to Washington, in charge of Company H, where they arrived July 4th.

"General Benham came up from Washington with the balance of the regiment, and ordered me, as soon as I had my work completed, to follow on, and join the regiment as soon as possible, with the three companies, C, F and I. Overtook rear of regiment at 4 o'clock, a. m., June 29th, near Brickerstown, Md., and kept with them from that time on. We arrived at Union Mills, Md., about 7 o'clock, p. m., June 30th, and bivouacked for the night.

"On Wednesday, July 1st, at 10 o'clock, a. m., we started for Washington, where we arrived July 3d, at 7 o'clock, p. m.

"I was informed that Union Mills was twelve (12) miles from Gettysburg, and that was as near as the regiment was to the battle."

THE SABINE PASS EXPEDITION.

THE THRILLING EXPERIENCE OF DETACHMENTS FROM THE SEVENTY-FIFTH AND ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-FIRST NEW YORK ABOARD TWO GUN-BOATS ON THAT UNFORTUNATE TRIP.

The ultimate purpose of the Sabine Pass expedition was the capture of the State of Texas. It was designed by General N. P. Banks, and the command of the expedition was placed in the hands of General William B. Franklin. General Banks expected General Franklin to make a landing at Sabine Pass, with the city of Houston as the main objective point. Had the expedition been successful, fortifications would have been thrown up, and a line of communication and supplies would have been established at the mouth of Brazos river until the Union troops could have captured Galveston Island and city. Banks had expected to have, within ten days from the landing, 20,000 men at Houston, where, strongly fortified, any attack in force could have been resisted and he would have commanded all the principal communications about Louisiana and Texas.

On Friday, September 4th, 1863, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, Brigadier-General Godfrey Weitzel left New Orleans with about 1,000 infantry, one battery of 30-pounder Parrott guns, and one 20-pounder, in four transports. Unfortunately, however, Lieutenant Commander Frederick Crocker, U. S. N., who was in command of the gun-boats Clifton and Sachem, lost his way. Instead of the attack being made Monday morning, it was not until Tuesday evening, September 8th, that the troops were ready. Aboard the Sachem were 25 men detailed from Company D, One Hundred and Sixty-first New York, under command of Lieutenant William W. Lindsay. Aboard the Arizona were Companies A and B; on the Granite City, Company E; Companies C, F, G, and I, under command of Captain Willis E. Craig, were detailed as a storming party and were carried on the steamer General Banks; Companies H and K, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel William B. Kinsey, were on the steamer N. H. Thomas.

Aboard the Clifton, which was the flagship, were two companies of the Seventy-fifth New York, G and B, under command of Lieutenants Charles H. Cox and William H. Root, about one hundred in all. Company B was assigned to duty on the upper deck and G on the lower deck.

When General Franklin announced that his troops were ready for action, the long delay had enabled the Confederates to mobilize a considerable force for resistance. The Clifton took up her position in the Texas channel and began to shell the enemy. The Sachem started up the Louisiana channel, followed by the Arizona, and after grounding slightly, moved off and began to participate in the action. Half way up to the battery a shot struck the Sachem's boiler, silenced her fire and put her out of action. The Clifton held to her course, but the Granite City and General Banks made no attempt to follow. The Clifton had her wheel-rope shot away and before repairs could be made a shot passed through her boiler, completely disabling her. She twice caught fire. The enemy had no trouble in finding her range and the men fell fast.

Some one hauled down the colors of the Clifton, but Captain Crocker ordered them replaced, but within a short time he realized that he was simply exposing his men to destruction and he surrendered his ship.

The Sachem in the meantime had also surrendered, throwing into the hands of the Confederates a full supply of ordnance stores, eighteen heavy guns, and two hundred prisoners, among them Lieutenant Commander Crocker, Lieutenant W. W. Lindsay of the One Hundred and Sixty-first New York, and Lieutenants Root and Cox of the Seventy-fifth New York. Fifty per cent. of those who were captured were New York State troops. Company D of the One Hundred and Sixty-first New York was practically wiped out.

The Official Records of the Rebellion contain no report from either one of the two New York regiments, the Seventy-fifth or the One Hundred and Sixty-first. Fortunately, however, Captain William W. Lindsay is now residing at Bath, and from him this office was enabled to obtain a list of the names of the men from his company who were detailed for duty on board the U. S. S. Sachem:

The following were killed or died of their wounds in the hands of the Confederates within three days after the battle:

Orvill C. Boorem (Booron).*	Monroe Snyder (James M. Snyder).*
Adam H. Wilcox.	Patrick Hart.
George T. Gannon.	Abram Blakesley.

From the diary of Lieutenant Frederick Cossum, formerly of the Seventy-fifth New York Volunteer Infantry, now commander of Seward Post, at Auburn, N. Y., the following extracts are taken, as illustrating the part which was played by the Seventy-fifth in this unfortunate expedition:

Sept. 4th (1863). The Thirteenth Army Corps from Grant's Army, under General C. C. Washburne, arrived at Algiers; and marched in and occupied Brashear City; in the afternoon ours, the Second Brigade, with other Nineteenth Corps troops, went on board transports at Algiers; and the expedition, numbering from 8 to 10,000, with artillery and cavalry, were turned over to the command of General Franklin; and in the evening it set sail for Sabine Pass, Texas. General Weitzel and staff, the Seventy-fifth New York and Billy Wilson's Zouaves embarked on the steamer Belvidere; it was just evening as the boats steamed down the river, passed the Crescent City, whose innumerable lights reflected in the river for miles presenting a strange and striking scene.

Sept. 5th, 1863. Daylight found the troops at the mouth of the Sabine river. Thence at noon sailed the fleet, consisting of the gunboats Clifton, Sachem and Arizona, with a dozen or more of river boats and ocean steamers. (Had the Belvidere been allowed to run up and land the Seventy-fifth New York, the fort would have been captured by 9 a. m.)

Sept. 6th. Fleet laid to for a short time to enable details of Seventy-fifth to be sent aboard the gunboats as marines. Companies G and B, commanded by Lieutenants Charles H. Cox and W. H. Root, with a few others from the regiment, about 100 in all, were sent on board the Clifton, the flagship of Lieutenant Commander Fred. Crocker. Company B was assigned to duty on the upper deck and G on the lower.

Sept. 7th. Another delay at the mouth of the river looked as though some one was trying to give the Johnnies an opportunity to blow us out of the water.

Sept. 8th. Steamed through Sabine Pass, the Clifton being ordered up near the Confederate redoubt on reconnaissance. A number of shells were tossed into the fort without eliciting any show of men or response. The Clifton and Sachem were both ordered up the difficult channel to assault the rebel works from the upper side; the Arizona was ordered to give battle from below, and a force was to be put ashore under the protection of the Granite City to attack the redoubt in the rear. The Seventy-fifth was assigned to this duty, and with a portion of the One Hundred and Sixty-first and One Hundred and Sixty-fifth New York went aboard the General Banks. The Sabine was very shallow and the boats made slow progress; the Sachem took the lead, followed by the Clifton, the Granite City and the Arizona; the first three began shelling the fort, but no response until the boats reached a certain spot which had been marked, when six guns opened at once; one of the first shots pierced the gunboat's boiler, disabling her at once, and causing her captain to run up the white flag. The Clifton then pushed forward, taking the Texas channel, which lay close to the fort. At first the Johnnies shots passed over her, but they soon got range; but just as she reached a spot opposite the fort she struck a sand bar with such force as to make her fast, the shock being so severe as to knock all hands off their feet and imbedding her in the mud so deep that she could not back out. The Confederates now got range and poured down on the deck and sides of the Clifton such a terrific fire of shot and canister, which splintered the bulwarks, shattered the machinery, and made awful havoc among the crew and soldiers. So near to shore was the grounded boat that her guns could not be sufficiently elevated to continue action. The men opened a brisk musketry fire, however, with a view of picking off the Rebel gunners; but this could not be long continued as exposure was certain death. After the engagement had lasted about fifteen minutes, and a number of officers, troops and crew had been killed or wounded, a 32-pound ball pierced the Clifton's steam-chest and terminated all attempts to get afloat; further resistance being useless, the colors were struck and the white flag was run up, whereupon hostilities ceased.

About one-half hour after the surrender, a Rebel craft came down from above the bend in the river and towed off the Sachem as a prize; another boat, called the Roebuck, approached the Clifton with a similar intent, but failing to get her afloat she took the prisoners aboard and steamed slowly up to Beaumont, some forty miles up the river.

By this engagement the Seventy-fifth lost 92 men, most of Companys B and G; 6 were killed. Lieutenant Crocker, commanding the Clifton, was severely wounded and several of his officers and crew were killed and wounded. When the flag was hauled down, a dozen or more men of the Seventy-fifth would not surrender and jumped overboard and swam to the other shore, running down the coast, and were picked up by a small boat from the Granite City; some of those who jumped were drowned and some recaptured. From the deck of the General Banks the Seventy-fifth New York had, with eagerness, watched the Clifton and Sachem attempt the passage of the fort, expecting every minute to be put ashore where it could assault the enemy, but with mingled disappointment, mortification and hot rage, it beheld the capture of the two boats and their own comrades; with these same feelings they contemplated the impracticability of the heavy draft Arizona attempting to accomplish the passage.

But their indignation and anger reached its climax only when, instead of landing an infantry force and taking the fort from the rear, Franklin signaled the Arizona, Granite City and Banks to rejoin the fleet without delay.

Brimful of wrath and dismay, without a single chance to rescue our cherished comrades or retrieve the fortunes of the day, the men saw this order obeyed.

If it were possible for anything to hurt Franklin in the estimation of the troops of this expedition, it was the information soon after received that the whole Rebel force did not exceed 170 Confederates in and about the fort. Had Franklin heard the expressions on his behalf, he would have left the army at once.

Sept. 9th. Sabine Pass was left by the fleet.

APPENDIX "G."

THE LOST COLOBS OF THE SEVENTH HEAVY ARTILLERY.

WITH A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE CAMPAIGN IN WHICH THEY WERE LOST—WHY PETERSBURG WAS NOT CAPTURED JUNE 15, 1864.

On the evening of June 14, 1864, Petersburg, Va., was comparatively in a defenceless condition. General Grant was well aware of this, and was confident of capturing the city within twenty-four hours. The Confederate works, which, in appearance, were formidable, were manned by only twenty-four hundred troops, mostly home guards, and irregulars — old men and young boys. These works had been constructed in the spring of 1862, and consisted of a circle of strong redans or batteries, connected by infantry parapets, of high profiles, with ditches, at a distance of about two miles from the city. The Army of the Potomac had reached the James river on June 14th, General Grant having consummated his masterly flank movement to the left and outmanoeuvred General Lee in a brilliant manner. Grant was convinced Petersburg could be captured by a coup. Once in possession of the Army of the Potomac, Petersburg would have ceased to be a factor in the cause of the Confederacy, for the Weldon and South Side railways, the two main arteries that supplied the Confederate army with reinforcements, supplies and vitality, would have been severed.

If ever an occasion demanded promptness in decision and celerity in movement, this was one. Yet by a concatenation of inexcusable delays and inexplicable blunders, the prize was dropped at the moment it was ready to fall into our hands—at a subsequent cost of thousands upon thousands of precious lives and millions upon millions of dollars. It is within the bounds of reason to say that at any previous period of the war, failure to capture Petersburg, under similar circumstances, would have been followed by a Court of Inquiry. And had any other commanding general than Grant been at the head of the army, an investigation would have resulted, and a shining light selected as an example, as was done with Fitz John Porter after second Bull Run, McClellan after Antietam, and Franklin after Fredericksburg.

With his usual perspicacity, Grant had grasped the situation. Failure befell him only, when he attempted combination movements and when he placed reliance unqualifiedly upon others.

On the morning of June 15th, General William F. ("Baldy") Smith, with his Eighteenth Corps and part of General Butler's command, aggregating 16,100 men, had been ordered by General Grant to proceed from Bermuda Hundred to Petersburg, six miles distant. At 10 o'clock, on the evening of the 14th, General Meade wired General Hancock:

"General Butler has been ordered to send to you at Wind-Mill Point sixty thousand rations. As soon as these are received and issued you will move your corps by the most direct route to Petersburg, taking up a position where the City Point railroad crosses Harrison's creek at the crossroads indicated on the map at this point, and extend your right over the mouth of Harrison's creek where we now have a work."

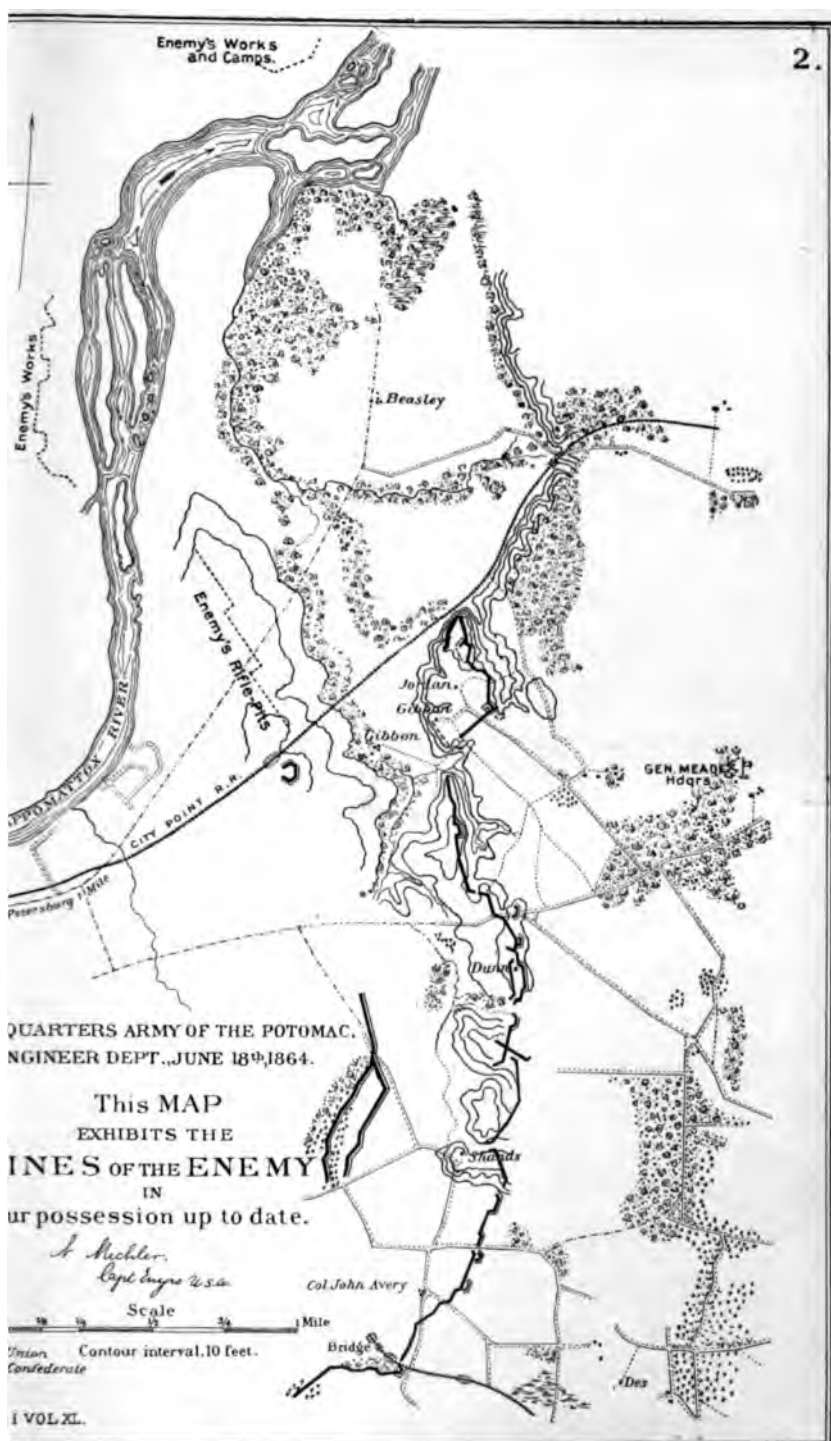

Six hours later or, to be precise, at 3.50 on the morning of the 15th, General Hancock reported that his entire corps, which aggregated 28,000 men—except one regiment of heavy artillery “for fatigue”—and four batteries of artillery, had crossed the James from Wilcox’s Landing to Wind-Mill Point—sixteen or seventeen miles from Petersburg. Now the blunders began to fall thick and fast. At 7.30 a. m. on the morning of the 15th, Meade, in answer to telegrams from Hancock, which announced that his rations had not arrived and that his troops had been ready to advance for several hours, ordered Hancock “to move immediately to the position assigned him last evening.” On the heels of this telegram came an erroneous report to Hancock that his delayed rations were received. Up to 9.40 nothing had been heard of them and Hancock, having announced to Meade that he had been deceived in reporting their arrival, at last gave orders for his command to move forward. For some reason that has not been explained, the signal officer failed to communicate the order. To add further to a delay that was already criminal and was to bring disaster to our arms for months to come, Colonel Charles H. Morgan, Hancock’s chief of staff, an alert, enterprising and gifted officer, who carried the same order, boarded a boat that ran aground, and it was not until half-past 10 o’clock that the column finally got under way.

Nor was the ill-luck that attended this combination movement from its inception, at an end. By some inscrutable oversight, either on the part of General Grant or General Meade, General Hancock had not been notified that Smith was to assault Petersburg and that the Second Corps was expected to co-operate. To add to the general complications, General Barlow, in command of the First Division, was misled by the map which the War Department had supplied, struck the wrong road, lost his way, and failed to join the main body until 3 a. m. on the morning of June 16th, eight or nine hours after the other two divisions reached the front.

In the meantime, General Smith had been reconnoitering the works before Petersburg from early morning of the 15th, with a view of making an assault. At 5 o'clock that afternoon, he concluded not to assault in column, but to mass his artillery, fire upon a certain redoubt in front of one of his brigades, and then attempt to carry the works with a strong skirmish line. The order to that effect was issued, and the troops were formed, only for Smith to discover—another link in the chain of blunders—that his chief of artillery, without authority, had marched his entire outfit to the rear to water horses, thus entailing a further delay of two hours. Finally, at 7 o'clock in the evening, after many precious hours had been needlessly wasted, Smith's artillery opened upon the Confederate works, which, to the general surprise, made no reply. The Federal skirmish line advanced, encountered a rattling infantry fire, that was easily brushed aside, and walked into the works, taking four guns and between two hundred and three hundred prisoners. Within two hours Smith, with trifling loss, captured seven redans—all armed with artillery—and a mile and a half of intrenchments.

In his report of the operations of the 15th and 16th days of June, 1864, General Hancock explains the delay in not moving forward from 6.30 a. m. to 10.30 a. m., because of the hitch in forwarding his rations. His chief of staff, Colonel Morgan, was ordered to remain with General Birney and conduct the march of the Second Corps. Morgan was furnished with the so-called Abbott map, that which had been made in 1861 by the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, and which, for present purposes, was absolutely worthless. For instance, the map indicated the position of Harrison's creek as flowing four miles from Petersburg—between that place and City Point. As a matter of fact, Harrison's creek ran inside the enemy's lines and was not within miles of the position laid down on the map. Hancock soon discovered the worthlessness of this map and, on the afternoon of the 15th, threw it away. The negro guides obtained by Colonel Morgan were ignorant, and uncommunicative; a great deal of the information they imparted was misleading. The inhabitants of the country were Confederates; when questioned they purposely deceived the troops.

It was not until 5.25 that afternoon that General Hancock received from General Grant a dispatch which was addressed to General Gibbon, with instructions to communicate to Hancock and to all division commanders, conveying the information that Smith had attacked Petersburg and carried the outer works, "and may need your assistance." Half an hour later a second dispatch was delivered to Hancock from General Smith which notified him that General Grant had authorized Smith to "call on you to hurry forward to Petersburg to aid in its capture." Smith further stated, "but to-night is the last night as General Lee is reported crossing at Chaffin's Bluff"—the first intimation Hancock received that he was expected to assist in the combination movement that had for its object the capture of Petersburg. Hancock promptly diverted the head of Birney's Division to a country road which led directly toward Petersburg, and the two leading divisions, Birney's and Gibbon's, were turned in that direction.

The day was excessively hot, the roads were covered with dust; the troops suffered keenly from heat and lack of water, and many of them fell by the wayside from exhaustion. At 6.30 p. m. that night, Birney's Division arrived at the Bryant house on Bailey's creek, about one mile in the rear of the position of Hink's Division of Smith's Eighteenth Corps. Hancock promptly rode forward, and met General Smith, who narrated the operations of the day and pointed out the position of the lines he had carried. Hancock reported the arrival of his two divisions and placed himself under Smith's orders. He was requested by Smith to relieve the Eighteenth Corps which then occupied the front line of works. By the time this relief was accomplished, it was 11 o'clock, too late and too dark for any advance operations.

Every Union general on the ground or in the rear, was convinced that General Lee would throw great masses of troops into the Petersburg works before morning. Smith had alluded to it, and Grant's plan to capture the city and its works before Lee could bring reinforcements, contemplated the placing the Army of the Potomac on the defensive and compelling General Lee to attack our forces in intrenched works.

Half an hour after midnight, General Hancock sent a dispatch to his two division commanders on the ground, Birney and Gibbon, that "if there are any points in your front commanding your position, now held by the enemy, the major-general commanding directs that they be taken at or before daylight, preferably before." The discretion lodged in these instructions was fatal. Had Hancock issued a mandatory order to attack at or before daylight, the chain of singular and remarkable blunders might have been broken. As it was, neither Gibbon or Birney acted upon the suggestion. They deferred action until after 7 a. m., three hours and more after daylight. Then they advanced to reconnoiter. General Lee, over night, had brought thousands of fresh troops on the field, had taken possession of the large redoubts and rifle-pits in front of the Second, Ninth and Eighteenth Corps, and strengthened his position at every point. General Grant telegraphed Hancock in effect that Lee had been strengthening the Confederate works and suggested that should Petersburg not fall on the night of the 15th, it would be advisable for him and General Smith to take up a defensive position and maintain it until all of the regular forces came up.

All chance of capturing Petersburg by the Federal troops disappeared when General Hancock relieved General Smith's troops on the night of the 15th. Up to that hour a general assault, at any time made by Smith, supported by the two divisions of the Second Corps, would have been successful beyond the shadow of a doubt. When it is considered that the Second Corps could have moved at daylight on the morning of the 15th as readily as at half-past ten, and arrived before Petersburg at one in the afternoon as readily as at seven in the evening, the ease with which the Confederate works could have been carried in view of all the circumstances, will be apparent to the most indifferent reader. Hancock properly resented the hostile criticisms that were directed at him for his failure to take Petersburg, and in his characteristic straightforward and honest way, demanded a formal investigation. Both General Grant and General Meade, however, exonerated him and his command from any blame, and manifested their confidence in him by placing him in general command of all the Union troops before Petersburg on the 16th.

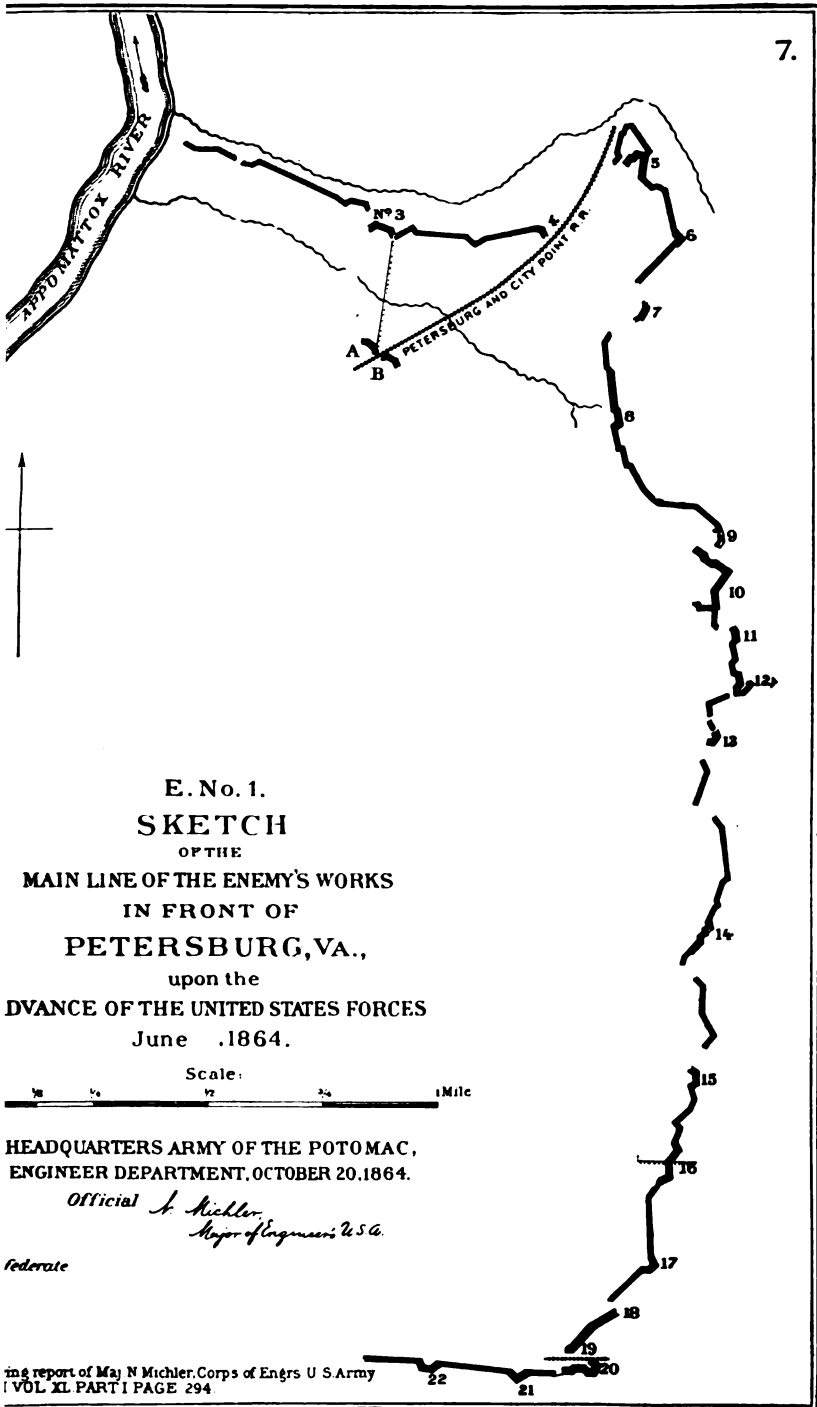

What had been a live certainty on the 15th inst., was a dead impossibility on the 16th. General Grant early on the 16th saw that the only way to retrieve the blunders of the 15th was by making a direct assault upon the enemy's works. Accordingly, he directed Hancock, on the afternoon of the 16th, to push forward a reconnoitering force in his front for the purpose of determining the most favorable point at which to attack the enemy's lines. Throughout the day there had been more or less infantry firing of a desultory character, accompanied now and then by heavy artillery from the redans in front of Birney's division.

All opinions agree that up to 7 o'clock that morning, Birney could have seized the redoubts in front of the Avery house that had been abandoned up to that hour, but which when he finally advanced were found filled with troops. When Meade came up in the afternoon, he ordered Hancock to make the assault at 6 o'clock against the Hare house and redoubts 3, 12, 13 and 14. Accordingly, Hancock gave orders to his three division commanders, Barlow, Birney and Gibbon, to advance at that hour and assault the works.

THE ASSAULT.

The first division of the Second Corps, with which this story has to do, consisted of about eight thousand men, and was divided into four brigades that were commanded as follows: First Brigade, Brigadier-General Nelson A. Miles; second, the Irish Brigade, Colonel Patrick Kelly of the Eighty-eighth New York who was killed in the charge of the 16th; third brigade, Colonel Clinton D. MacDougall of the One Hundred and Eleventh New York; fourth brigade, Colonel James A. Beaver of the One Hundred and Forty-eighth Pennsylvania. Of the twenty-five regiments or skeletons of regiments that constituted the first division, fourteen came from the State of New York, seven from Pennsylvania, one from Massachusetts, one from Michigan, one from New Hampshire, and one from Delaware.

For the past forty days this division had done the severest kind of work, and had been under fire incessantly. From the first day of the Wilderness Campaign to the present its losses had been appalling. For the three days preceding its arrival at the James River, it had marched ninety miles—splendid work, in view of the rough character of the country through which it passed, the broiling sun to which it was exposed, and the keen sufferings which it was compelled to endure.

The corps was slightly handicapped at this particular time because of General Hancock's physical condition. The hard work he had done since the opening of the campaign, and the hours he had spent in the saddle, united with the unbearable weather, had resulted in reopening his Gettysburg wound which was now causing him the most excruciating agony. Then again, Hancock labored under two disadvantages; first in not being acquainted with the country around Petersburg, and second in being deficient in what military men specify as "the topographical instinct," and laymen "the bump of locality." While no man in the army could handle his forces on the field with more skill and dexterity, or determine the weak points of an adversary's line with greater promptness and certainty, the ability to select advantageous positions or to anticipate the judgment of the enemy in selecting prominent positions, he never possessed. The latitude he had given his subordinates the night before, reflected the suffering he was undergoing and the effect that that suffering had produced on his mind.

At 6 o'clock, when the line of battle was formed, Barlow's division occupied the extreme left of the line. The Ninth Corps was reported to be close behind and within supporting distance. The Irish Brigade was on the right of General Beaver's Brigade which faced the Confederate redans 3 and 12. The Seventh New York Heavy Artillery was on the right of the Fourth, Beaver's Brigade, the right of their line connecting with the left of the Irish Brigade. This regiment was the largest that ever left the city of Washington for the front. It was organized August 19, 1862, as the One Hundred and Thirteenth New York Infantry, and was called "The Albany County Regiment." In December, 1862, it was converted into the Seventh Heavy Artillery and two additional companies were given to it. From September, 1862, to May, 1864, the regiment had been in the defenses of Washington. When General Grant called for reinforcements after the Wilderness campaign, over ten thousand of the 55,178 troops that were sent forward, were enlisted in New York State. Among them were the following: Second Mounted Rifles, 1,000 men; Second Heavy Artillery, 1,679; Seventh Heavy Artillery, 1,835; Eighth Heavy Artillery, 1, 500; Ninth Heavy Artillery, 1,400; Tenth Heavy Artillery, 1,759. Any one of these regiments was in numbers larger than the average brigade of the Army of the Potomac.

The Seventh Heavy Artillery received its baptismal fire at Spottsylvania Court-house May 19, 1864. Here it lost 76 men. At North Anna and the Totopotomoy, its losses aggregated 135. At Cold Harbor it lost 418, killed, wounded and missing. Here it captured a Confederate work and turned its guns upon the enemy. In one month's time from the date of the regiment's departure from Washington, its losses aggregated 1,191 men, nearly two-thirds of its full strength.

The greatest blow ever inflicted upon it was to fall in this charge before Petersburg. The regiment went into action divided into three battalions; companies E, K, L and D, constituted the first; H, B, C and G, the second; I, F, A, M, the third. Its Colonel, Lewis O. Morris, had been killed on the 4th day of June before Cold Harbor, and the regiment was now commanded by its Lieutenant-Colonel, John Hastings. At 6 o'clock, the whole line advanced, General Barlow the division commander leading in person. But when a 12-pound shell ploughed through the center color guard, the General retired through the opening. That one shot killed or mortally wounded the entire guard. Acting Adjutant O'Brien reformed the color guard six times while crossing the plowed field over which the brigade advanced, a distance of from six hundred to seven hundred yards. The advance was met by a terrific fire of grape and canister, which increased in violence and compelled the Irish Brigade to change direction in order to gain the cover of a small ravine. The right flank of the Seventh Heavy was thus exposed to a galling, enfilading fire of grape and canister, and the right wing of the regiment sought refuge in the ravine, or as some of the survivors assert, in the ditch of the work which they had been expected to capture.

In the meantime, the supports from the Ninth Corps had failed to come up and more or less confusion existed along the lines of the two brigades. Colonel Kelly, the commander of the Irish Brigade, had been killed and Colonel Beaver of the Fourth Brigade had been wounded; the command of the brigade thus devolving upon Colonel Hastings and of the regiment upon Major E. A. Springstead. As the regiment was unsupported on either right or left flank, and as the enemy was pouring a vicious en-flading fire into the right flank and from the rear, Gen. Barlow gave the order to retire. The men of the right wing, who lay huddled together in the ravine, and who either failed to hear the order or assumed that they might be able to slip out under cover of darkness, remained in this position until about dusk, when Lieutenant Francis M. Kelso of the Forty-fourth Tennessee, with seventeen men, emerged from the works and advanced upon them. Lieutenant-Colonel David B. McCreary of the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Pennsylvania, the ranking officer, proceeded to surrender the Union troops in the ravine. Three hundred and one of the Seventh Heavy Artillery were taken to Petersburg that night.

When the scattered remnants of the regiment returned to their camp that night, it was known that the national colors were lost; but the next day they were recovered, having been picked up on the field by Burnside's men. No report, however, was made that the regiment had lost another flag on this sanguinary field. The missing stand of colors had been presented to the regiment by Governor Edwin D. Morgan, in recognition of the enterprise and energy that were exercised in organizing the regiment under the President's call for volunteers, July, 1862. In fact no evidence has ever been found to show that the regiment was aware of the fact that the regimental colors were lost. They bore the infantry designation of the regiment—"The One Hundred and Thirteenth New York"—and the men who were captured and taken to Petersburg that night gave the artillery designation of the regiment to their captors, who naturally enough were unable to explain to what organization the colors actually belonged. When the destructive effects of the enemy's fire upon the color guard, the heavy losses which the regiment had sustained in officers and men, the general shifting of officers of high rank, and the darkness, united with the utter demoralization that must have existed in the rank and file when the regiment reassembled, are taken into consideration, a reasonable explanation can be offered for the failure to report the loss of this stand of colors.

At the time when the regiment imagined that all their colors were accounted for, the following paragraph appeared in the Richmond Examiner of the 20th of July, 1864:

"There were deposited temporarily in this office on Saturday two flags taken from the enemy on Friday in the battle of Petersburg by General Wise's brigade. One of these flags that changed bearers on that occasion is a large, elegant silk banner, heavily fringed, which bears the inscription, 'One Hundred and Thirtieth Regiment New York State Volunteers,' and beneath, the motto, 'Excelsior.' Either face of the banner bears a painting illustrative of battle scenes in the Revolutionary war, with the figure of General Washington in the foreground. It is the largest and most superb regimental flag we ever saw. The silken folds are rent in several places by bullet and shell, and the top of the staff is shattered by a minie-ball. Splashes of blood here and there upon the torn silk suggest a hand-to-hand conflict for the possession of the flag, closing with the death of its supporters. * * * We understand that General Wise has presented the Excelsior banner to the State, and that it will be hung up in the State library along with the many other kindred trophies of the war that now adorn its wall."

This paragraph appeared in the report of the Confederate General, Bushrod R. Johnson, who explained that the colors were captured on Thursday the 16th of June, by his brigade, and were delivered into the hands of a Mr. Trent, acting druggist of Poplar Lawn hospital, by Corporal L. W. Bush, Company I, Forty-Fourth Tennessee regiment, who was wounded and sent to the rear.

Enclosed with General Johnson's report was one from Second Lieutenant F. M. Kelso, Second company, Forty-Fourth Tennessee Infantry, who stated:

"The enemy about 5 p. m. made two charges. The first was repulsed when the second was bearing down upon the extreme right, moving right oblique. Myself and seventeen men moved into the interval between the right of Forty-Fourth and Battery No. 15, and engaged the enemy, who was rapidly advancing. I deployed my men, covering about fifty yards of the interval. The enemy continued marching until they arrived within fifty yards of the work (our intrenchments, which I had but recently occupied). One of the colors was shot down six times. There was a ravine within about fifty yards of our intrenchments in which they laid down and commenced waving their handkerchiefs, and I ordered my men to cease firing and called upon them to surrender. They continued waving their hats and handkerchiefs. I still demanded their surrender. I then brought my men to a ready and told the enemy if they did not come in they would be again fired upon. The firing was again commenced and the enemy continued holding out, waving handkerchiefs, hats, etc. I then with my men marched out of the works and demanded the surrender, which they did, and marched them inside of our works."

THE EFFORTS TO RECOVER THEM.

Last summer an examination of the tattered battle flags on the top floor of the capitol in this city, disclosed the fact that the Morgan colors were missing. The Confederate reports were indefinite as to the final disposition of the colors at Richmond. Had they been placed in the capitol of the confederacy, there was every possibility that General Ord's troops would have recovered them, turned them over to the ordnance corps of the United States army, which in turn would have transmitted them to the Adjutant-General's office at Washington, D. C. It was apprehended that the conspicuous beauty of these colors might have attracted the cupidity of some influential southerner, who would have used his influence to remove them from the capitol.

It will be remembered that Richmond was visited by a great fire the day of the evacuation by the Confederate troops, April 3, 1865. The dispatch which Assistant Secretary of War Charles A. Dana sent to Secretary of War Stanton, on April 6th, best describes the condition of affairs:

"Your telegram respecting public documents and correspondence received. I had already directed General (George F.) Shepley to have all these papers collected and forwarded to the Department. A great number of mail-bags all ready to be sent out were seized at the post-office, and I think were forwarded yesterday from City Point. The records and papers of the Department and of Congress were removed before the evacuation, and during the firing the Capitol was ransacked and the documents there were scattered. The letter of Lee, which I telegraphed yesterday was accidentally picked up by an officer, I do not think that much of value will be discovered. I propose to return to Washington at once, unless you direct otherwise. I find that Breckinridge left here only about half an hour before Weitzel got in. The damage of the fire was enormous. It burned nearly everything between Main street and the river for about three-quarters of a mile. The custom-house and Spottswood Hotel are the only important buildings saved in the burned district. The block opposite the Spottswood, including the War Department building, is entirely destroyed. * * * * *

Through the co-operation of Colonel F. C. Ainsworth, U. S. A., Chief of the Record and Pension Office, Hon. H. Clay Evans, Commissioner of Pensions, and General Marcus J. Wright, formerly of the Confederate Army, the Commissioner for collecting Confederate records for the War Department, it was learned that Corporal Bush was killed in September, 1864, and that Lieutenant Kelso was living, a member of the State Legislature, at Fayetteville, Tennessee.

In answer to a request for information, General Charles J. Anderson, Adjutant-General of the State of Virginia, wrote:

" I have made inquiries in different directions and have not been able to ascertain if such colors have any existence at present. My personal recollection of the matter of the capture of the United States flags is that from '61 to '64 there were a great number, some hundreds, displayed in the library of the Capitol building at Richmond. These, it is understood, were taken down later and packed in boxes in the then Confederate War Department on Ninth street. When the city was fired early on the morning of April 3d, this building was burned, though later in the day. The main body of the records that it contained had been previously sent off in advance of the retreat of General Lee's army, and were captured at Danville and Greensboro, and are now in the vaults at the War Department at Washington. What became of the flags I do not know. It is possible that they were burned, or that the provost-marshal in charge of the detachments of Ord's division on duty in the city, saved from this building, as he undoubtedly would have done had he known their whereabouts."

In the meantime a very interesting letter had been received from Lieutenant Kelso, dated Fayetteville, Tenn. Lieutenant Kelso wrote:

" You ask for a statement of how I captured, on the 16th day of June, 1864, in front of Petersburg (with only 17 men), three Federal or United States flags, with between six hundred and seven hundred Federal prisoners. One of these flags was a beautiful silk flag and bore the inscription 'One Hundred and Thirteenth New York State Volunteers.' One was an artillery flag and had in its center the red figure of the ace of spades.* I do not remember the inscription on the third flag. Enclosed you will find a diagram* made from my recollection of the ground. Our troops had to spread out in single file, one man about every five or six feet to cover the ground. The regiment that I belonged to (Forty-fourth Tennessee) had been changed several times that day, and, notwithstanding the thinness of our line, we held our position. No Federal troops made their appearance in the angle on the right of our regiment till late in the evening. Colonel John F. Fulton discovered that a force of Federals was moving on the vacant angle on his right, came over hastily to me and ordered me to take my company to the right quickly, deploy it so as to occupy the vacant space and to hold the position or die in the ditches. By the time my men were deployed the Federal line was close to our ditches. The first fire from my men caused some confusion in the Federal line. They fell back a few steps and lay down. We continued to fire on them and as they seemed to be huddled, or "hunched" together, must have been very destructive. In a very short time I saw them sticking up hats and handkerchiefs. I ordered "Cease firing," got up on the ditches and halloed to them to come in. I could hear them talking, and some of the officers were cursing the men and trying to get them to fight. By this time it was sundown. I noticed another line some distance in their rear that seemed to be moving in the direction of us. So I knew if we captured our prize we would have to do it quickly. I called for volunteers to go with me to bring in the Federals. All my men followed except two; one of them received a fatal shot and was lying there dead; the other, Corporal Burt, was wounded. We went out in Indian file. We kept some distance to our left of the Federals. As soon as we started we motioned them to come toward our ditches. They finally started. We filed in behind them as soon as they were separated from their guns. As soon as, or just before, they got to our ditches, I ran to the front and told them to file to the left and continue up the works till they came to some of our men who would escort them to the rear. I then ordered my men to get to their positions and be ready for the advancing column. But it did not come, and in a few minutes it was dark. As the prisoners passed in I secured one of the flags. One of my men near me took another. I gave these two to Corporal Bush and told him to take them to the hospital. The third flag was handed to me after dark by one of my men. I gave this one to Lieutenant Spect to take to Colonel Fulton's headquarters. I could not leave my position for we were expecting another attack every moment. The regiment was resisting an attack at the same time I was. No troops could fire on the Federals in my front, except the seventeen men I had charge of, on account of the ridge or high ground. Battery 15 could not for the same reason. Battery 14 could have done so, but there was no cannon in this fort. It was entirely vacant. I have endeavored to explain this capture in my blunt way, so I hope you may understand it. Some of the men that were with me on that occasion are still living. One lives near me; his name is G. W. D. Parton. I talked this over with him yesterday. I showed him this diagram; he said it was correct. I did not have time to count the prisoners, but am satisfied there were six hundred or seven hundred of them, some of my men say there were at least eight hundred. I had command of Company B, Forty-fourth Tennessee Regiment; my captain was sick. I was just twenty years old."

In October, 1897, the welcome and satisfactory information was received that the lost colors were boxed up in the War Department at Washington, D. C., having been recovered by the Ordnance Department the day Richmond was evacuated by the Confederates, April 3d, 1865. Accordingly, a measure was introduced in the House in December, by Mr. Southwick, the representative of the Albany district, and later in the Senate, by Senator Platt, of New York, authorizing the War Department to return these colors to the State of New York.*

* Since this report has gone to press, the resolution to restore the colors to the State of New York has passed both branches of Congress and been signed by President McKinley. In conformity with that act, the colors were received by Gov. Black at the Executive Chamber, Albany, August 10, 1897, and were transferred at once to Adjutant-General Tillinghast, who is the custodian of all Records of the War of the Rebellion of the State of New York.—STATE HISTORIAN.

LIST OF THE MEN WHO MOST DISTINGUISHED THEMSELVES FOR GALLANTRY IN THE ASSAULT ON JANUARY 15, 1865.

In the Official Records of the Rebellion Lieutenant-Colonel James A. Colvin makes the following report of the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth New York Infantry at the assault on Fort Fisher, January 15, 1865:

"The undersigned has the honor to report that upon the opening of the engagement of 15th instant Col. Alonzo Alden was in command of the regiment, but on reaching the enemy's works assumed command of the brigade, Colonel Louis Bell being wounded. The undersigned then took command of the regiment.

"It would seem almost invidious to make any special mention of officers and men, when all did their duty with unparalleled gallantry and zeal. The undersigned can bear testimony that every officer led his men, and the men vied with each other to attain the front.

"Colonel Alonzo Alden was distinguished for his accustomed coolness and bravery.

"Major J. (Joseph) H. Allen was shot through the arm and leg, but persisted in remaining with the command.

"Captains Daniel Ferguson, James H. Dunn, Charles D. Merrell, J. (Jonas) H. Warren, and E. (Emory) W. Church were distinguished for their coolness and gallantry.

"Lieutenants J. (James) H. Straight, wounded, Michael Ryan, killed, Michael Russell, wounded, all in command of companies, were the right men in the right places. After the death of Lieutenant Ryan, Lieutenant J. (John) B. Foote assumed command of his company and led it gallantly.

"Lieutenant Eugene Van Santvoord also deserves mention.

"Lieutenant E. (Erastus) R. Mosher was hit by a spent ball on the 13th instant. He went into action on the 15th, being obliged to use a cane; he hopped into the fight leading his men.

"Other officers distinguished themselves; indeed, all deserve mention. The undersigned has mentioned such as came particularly under his notice."

A list of enlisted men who distinguished themselves, which Colonel Colvin alludes to in his final paragraph, does not appear with the report. This office opened communication with Colonel Colvin with a request that if the list were still in his possession, to forward it. Colonel Colvin was unable to comply with the request. Through the Hon. L. E. Griffith of Troy, the matter was brought to the attention of General Alonzo Alden, who promptly furnished this office with the missing part of the report, which reads as follows:

I have the honor to report the following names of enlisted men as having distinguished themselves for gallantry in the assault on the 15th:

Private John Finlay (Finley*) Company "A," wounded;

First Sergeant John Fleming (Flemming); Color Bearer Corporal Peter Osterhout (Osterhoudt), wounded; Corporal John McGolrick; Private Charles Madden "B."

Private William H. Freeman, "B," who volunteered to carry the brigade flag after the bearer was wounded;

*The names in parentheses as of record on the rolls in the Adjutant-General's office
Alban. N. Y.—STATE HISTORIAN.

Corporal Patrick Holley—"D;"

Private Patrick Murphy—"E"—killed;

Corporals John McLoughlin (McLaughlin), T. J. Congden (Thomas J. Congden), Privates John Jimjack (John Jenyack), Patrick Curley—"F;"

First Sergeant Charles H. Noyes, wounded; Corporal L. Odell (Lewis E. Odell)—"H"—killed;

First Sergeant Patrick Alymer (Patrick J. Aylmer); Sergeant Benjamin G. Walker; Private James Lester—"G;"

First Sergeant George Campbell; Sergeants James F. Smith, Robert Rainsbury, wounded—"I."

And specially commended for bravery in the presence of the commanding officer:

Corporal Thomas Ryan, "I;" First Sergeant Joseph White, "K;" Sergeant Major T. H. Gardner (Thomas H. Gardner).

The commanding officer desires especially to mention Frederick Close of Company F, who was conspicuous for his gallantry and bravery in getting a field piece into position and firing upon the enemy after we had got inside the works. Many of the officers report that their men did so well that they could make no special mention, and the commanding officer is constrained to base his report chiefly upon circumstances within his own observation.

Very respectfully,

JAMES A. COLVIN,

Lieut.-Colonel Commanding 169th N. Y. V.

APPENDIX "I."

THE LAST FIGHT IN TENNESSEE.

THE ELEVENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY WINDS UP THE STRUGGLE
AT GERMANTOWN, APRIL 18, 1865.

Lieutenant John H. Mills of Company D, Eleventh New York Cavalry, now living at Canton, N. Y., has furnished this office with a copy of the report of the last fight of the War in the State of Tennessee, at Germantown, April 18th, 1865, in which a detachment from Troops E, G, L and M, of the Eleventh New York Cavalry, took part:

The last fight of the War, in Tennessee, occurred at Germantown on the 18th of April, 1865. At that time the mounted portion of the Eleventh New York Cavalry lay at Germantown, some fifteen miles from Memphis & Charleston railroad, engaged in picket and patrol duty; Major George W. Smith was in command of the battalion. Lieutenant John H. Mills, of D Company, in command of a detachment, composed of men from Companies E, G, L and M, was, on the 18th of April, 1865, patrolling the railroad from Colliersville to Germantown. The detachment on that day numbered eighteen men. Application had been made by Lieutenant Mills, at Headquarters, a short time previous, for a larger detail, but it was not furnished, Colonel Davis, of the Twelfth Illinois Cavalry, who was in command, not thinking the service dangerous. On the morning of the 18th, when within about three miles from Colliersville, Lieutenant Mills was attacked by a company or squadron of Confederate cavalry or bushwackers, numbering, as was afterward ascertained, 85 men, under command of Colonel Ford or Foote, called "Club Foot Ford." As the patrol moved along parallel with the railroad the Confederates dashed out from a cross road and the timber on the left, almost entirely surrounding the little detachment, and at once opened fire. Privates Kip, Miller, Cronk, Mills, Reynolds and another, name not remembered, were killed, and Sergeant Coonrod, of G, mortally wounded at the first fire. Private Cunningham was badly wounded, receiving three gun shot wounds. Lieut Mills was wounded in the hand, horse was struck and became unmanageable. The fighting was fierce and indiscriminate. The detachment was ambuscaded and taken by surprise and, though greatly outnumbered, the best defense possible was made. The remainder of the detachment cut their way through to Germantown, but few of our boys escaped. As a result of the morning's work (there) were six killed, two badly wounded and seven captured.

Two men and Lieut. Mills cut their way through. The loss of the Guerillas is not known. The command was taken entirely by surprise, as it was hardly expected that at that time in Tennessee, within fifteen miles of Memphis, it was possible that the Confederates were not aware that the War was substantially over. It is believed that that name of the man who was in command of these bushwackers was Captain Clinton Fort, Company G, C. S. Army; see page 809, Vol. XLIX, Series I, Part II, Serial No. 104 of the Rebellion Records, letter of C. C. Washburn, Major-General. This affair is believed to have been the last in which blood was shed in the conflict in Tennessee. The men killed belonged to D Company, with the exception of Sergeant Coonrod, who was of Company G. A report of this affair was made, but so far as the writer has been able to learn, the men composing this detachment of Guerillas were never more fully identified; nor does a report of the affair, as transmitted to Headquarters by Lieutenant Mills, appear in the Rebellion Records.

JOHN H. MILLS,
Late Lieut. Co. D, 11th N. Y. Cav.

APPENDIX "J."

FROM WAUHATCHIE TO THE CAPTURE OF SAVANNAH.

AN INTERESTING NARRATIVE FROM THE DIARY OF CHARLES VAN WAGONER, LATE OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST NEW YORK INFANTRY.

Of the many interesting contributions received by this office the diary of Mr. Van Wagoner stands conspicuous. In spite of the vicissitudes, the hardships, the privations through which he and his regiment passed, he seems to have been able to jot down daily occurrences, with a fidelity and accuracy that are commended by survivors of his regiment who have perused his record.

It will be remembered that after the Chickamauga campaign, when Grant's army, cooped up in Chattanooga, was on the point of starvation, the Eleventh and Twelfth Corps were sent from the Army of the Potomac to re-enforce the Army of the Cumberland. Mr. Van Wagoner's diary begins October 2d, 1863, the day of arrival of the Eleventh Corps at Bridgeport, Ala. His narrative includes the battle of Wauhatchie, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, the toilsome and discouraging march to Knoxville and the return to Chattanooga in the depth of winter, the Atlantic Campaign, the March to the Sea, the North Carolina Campaign, and closes with the grand review at Washington. When the Eleventh and Twelfth Corps were consolidated and formed into the Twentieth Army Corps, the One Hundred and Forty-first New York was attached to the First Brigade, First Division.

LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN, WAUHATCHIE, MISSIONAR
BRIDGE AND KNOXVILLE CAMPAIGN.

The Eleventh Corps arrived from the Army of the Potomac and encamped at Bridgeport, Ala., October 2d, 1863. Nothing but usual routine of camp life for the next eight days. The railroad bridge at this point has been burned.

Oct. 10th. Our brigade, Second Brigade, Third Division Eleventh Army Corps, was sent to Stephenson, Ala., as was feared an attempt would be made to blow up the railroad tunnel. After making a reconnoissance and discovering nothing, returned to Stephenson and boarded a train laden with corn for the use of the army horses at Bridgeport. The grade to the latter place being very steep, and the brakes being poor, all control of the train was lost for some time, and it looked very much as if we would all be dashed over the high embankment at Bridgeport. But at the last mile, brakes began to take hold and the train was brought to a standstill at Bridgeport and the One Hundred and Forty-first disembarked, pretty well scared, but none the worse for their perilous ride. Nothing but camp life until Oct. 27th. Left Bridgeport and crossed the Tennessee river on a pontoon bridge and marched toward Chattanooga. Bivouacked for the night at Whitesides.

Oct. 28th. On the march again at 6 a. m., and during the afternoon came in sight of Lookout Mountain. The advance commenced skirmishing and driving the enemy back near Wauhatchie. The batteries on Lookout Mountain shelled our column and killed one man in the One Hundred and Forty-first. We march into Lookout Valley with bands playing and colors flying. The troops about Chattanooga were glad to see us and called us the Cracker Boys, as now communications by the railroad we had come were opened to Bridgeport and they could receive their rations, which they were very much in need of at that time. Geary's Division of the Twelfth Army Corps encamped at Wauhatchie, while we went on to near Brown's Ferry. About 10 p a detail for a reconnoissance was made from the One Hundred and Forty-first, under command of Major C. W. Clanharty, and went beyond the picket lines a short distance, when they were abruptly halted by some one. The Major, being a great tactician, wanted everything done right, so he hallooes out, "Why don't you challenge us right?" supposing he was talking to one of our own pickets. The fellow answered back, "How should I do it?" "Say Halt, advance one and give the countersign!" says Clanharty. The picket repeated the words as he (Clanharty) instructed him, and a man by the name of Wellington C. Hurd, of Company "B," was sent forward and quickly taken prisoner, and then the Major became aware that he had been teaching a rebel how to do picket duty. The Confederates now opened fire, and our men returning the fire, and slowly falling back, the Major occasionally ordering Lieutenant Eccles, who was more to the left of the line of skirmishers, "Hold your position, Eccles, at all hazards," which the enemy would catch on to and repeat. The firing roused the sleeping camps below and gave them time to prepare themselves, and it was lucky too that they did, for Longstreet now came down off from the mountain and made a fierce assault on Geary's Division at Wauhatchie. The battle lasted about three hours and until after midnight before they were repulsed. The One Hundred and Forty-first was among the troops sent to Geary's support. Their loss was 1 killed, 1 wounded and 1 taken prisoner. But for the reconnoissance sent out that night from the One Hundred and Forty-first, Geary would undoubtedly have been surprised, and the result hard to tell.

Oct. 29th. The One Hundred and Forty-first occupied a ridge near Lookout Mountain. During the afternoon, head-quarter wagons from Bridgeport arrived, and were shelled from the mountain as they crossed an opening in the woods, but came through all right. About this time, a shower of bullets came whistling over our heads, but did no harm. We were ordered to fall in and marched about two miles out on the Kelly's Ferry road, and encamped at the right of the road in a heavy oak woods, where we lay until November 23d, the time being occupied in repairing roads and fixing up quarters, which were constructed by splitting out plank from the oak trees, notching them together, and putting our tents on this rough cabin for a roof. They were crude, but very comfortable.

Nov. 22d. We fell in about 3 p. m. in light marching order, and marched toward Chattanooga, leaving our camp in charge of the sick, etc., who were excused by the surgeons. We crossed the Tennessee at Brown's Ferry. From the peculiar course of the river at Moccasin Bend it was necessary to cross twice in order to reach Chattanooga, which we did shortly after dark, and bivouacked a short distance from Fort Wood, on some high ground facing Missionary Ridge. The camp fires of Bragg's army were twinkling and glimmering all along the ridge, and the enemy could plainly be seen as they moved about among their fires.

Nov. 23d. Dawned cold and cloudy, and the air was raw. After we had eaten our breakfast we surveyed the situation. The whole side of the ridge facing us was covered with the quarters of the enemy. Just in front of us, a short distance, was the railroad; on one side of it, our pickets; on the other side, the enemy's; neither side was firing at the other. Aids and orderlies were seen riding in every direction, and it was evident to the rank and file "that something was going to happen." Somewhere in the neighborhood of 2 p. m., we saw General Grant on a platform in a tree, occupied by the Signal Corps in Fort Wood. Presently the troops began to march out from their camps, and as they came out, regiment after regiment, brigade after brigade, with their colors flying, they made a grand and imposing appearance. But for the stretcher bearer's taking position just in rear of them, one might have thought that a review was to take place, and I have since heard that's just what the enemy did think. When the line was thus completed, one of the 64-pounders in Fort Wood let go a shot at the enemy's camp, followed by another and another, and this being the signal for the "Ball to open," our pickets fired into the enemy's, who returned the fire and hastily retreated, followed closely by the line of battle, which soon disappeared into the woods. The rattle of musketry now became one general roar, and the wounded now began to come to the rear; that is, all who could help themselves. The position of the One Hundred and Forty-first at this time was in rear of the centre, in second line, in support of first line of battle, thus giving them an excellent opportunity to witness the opening of this engagement. Just before dark we were moved to the left, and then forward to near Orchard Knob and more in front of Fort Wood. The enemy's tents had nearly all disappeared. We moved up near the first line and laid down in line of battle; many balls go humming about our heads. As we were in the woods now, our opportunities to observe were not as good as at the opening of the battle. Orchard Knob had been captured during the afternoon; we lay in line of battle all night, the firing having died down to picket firing.

Nov. 24th. A drizzling rain during the forenoon. No fighting on this part of the line. We are marched across Citico creek, and up the river to the left of Sherman's lines. During the early part of the afternoon we hear Hooker's guns firing onto the enemy on the side of Lookout, and presently we can see the lines fighting for a time, and then a mist or fog, together with the smoke from the musketry and artillery, settled about half way down the mountain, obscuring the contestants from our view for a time, and then, after a while, they could be seen fighting far up the mountain, above these clouds. This probably is what gave the engagement the name of "The Battle above the Clouds." The roar of cannon and din of musketry was loud and incessant until dark, when it died down to skirmish or picket firing. As we paced our beats through the night, we watched the flashes of these pickets firing at one another, and wondered how the tide of battle was going.

Nov. 25th. The day dawned bright and clear, and as the sun came up over Lookout mountain, it revealed the Stars and Stripes, floating to the breeze from her loftiest peak, and then went up simultaneously, from every throat of that vast army about Chattanooga, a glad hurrah! Cheer after cheer rent the air, for all knew then that "Fighting Joe Hooker" had won the battle that was to make him famous, in all the ages to come, as the Hero of Lookout mountain—"The Battle above the Clouds." We now turned our attention to the crest of Missionary Ridge, where vast numbers of Confederate troops seemed to be massing in Thomas' front. About 10 or 11 a. m., the fighting commenced again, with Sherman on the left, Thomas in the centre, while Hooker came in on the right, by way of Rossville. The One Hundred and Forty-first was again in second line and was moved up in a piece of woods close to the first line. The fighting as we could hear it, and what we could see of it, was terrific at times. During the afternoon we constructed good works, but by the middle or latter part of the afternoon, the enemy was routed and retreating toward Ringold, and thus ended the three days at Chattanooga.

Nov. 26th. We move out of our camp and with the rest of the army are following on Bragg's heels. During the afternoon we pass through Chickamauga—the station and a lot of Confederate commissary stores having been fired to keep them from falling into our hands. Tents were left standing in some of the Confederate camps, so hurriedly had they retreated. The roads were strewn with broken caissons, muskets and ammunition, and played-out wagons, the wagons in every instance having the spokes cut to render them useless. As Longstreet had Burnside besieged at Knoxville, and the way was now open to send the much needed relief, accordingly on November 27th the One Hundred and Forty-first was among the troops that started for that point, passing through Graysville, Cleveland, Charleston, Mouse Creek, Sweetwater, Athens and to Loudon. The day before reaching Loudon, the enemy's cavalry was sighted, but a few shells from one of our batteries soon dispersed them, and next morning, just before daylight, we entered the place, but found it nearly deserted. There were a few Confederate sick there. The town was about destitute of provisions, the railroad bridge had been burned, and a large amount of equipments, for both infantry and cavalry, thrown into the river. On the opposite bank were some nice barracks, which had been erected and occupied by Burnside's troops before falling back on Knoxville. We spent the day hunting the town over for something eatable or wearable, as we were quite destitute of both, not having any means of procuring anything to eat except what we foraged from the country as we went along, and it had been so over run with troops there was but little to forage. A little corn meal, or musty wheat flour, or perhaps a cow or stray pig that had been missed, or was too poor for the enemy to take, was about all there was to be had; and not being able to obtain clothing before leaving our camps at Chattanooga, on account of the limited means of transportation, our shoes and our trousers were giving out, and no help for it but to grin and bear it. We lay at Loudon two days and one night, then marched up the river some 5 or 6 miles, to where the Pioneers had constructed the most unique bridge it has ever been the fortune of the writer to see, for an army to cross the river on. It was made by taking all the old wagons that could be found in that country, anchoring them up and down the stream, and then laying boards and planks from one wagon to another. And on this novel bridge the troops crossed. When Company "A" of the One Hundred and Forty-first reached the opposite bank, they halted until the balance of the regiment closed up. Henry Miller, a member of that company, accidentally discharged his gun, the ball passing up through his head, killing him instantly. During the afternoon we pass through Unita, a Quaker settlement, and encamp about nine miles from Knoxville. This was about December 5th.

Dec. 6th. We do not march, and it is soon rumored that Longstreet, knowing of our coming, had raised the siege and departed and that we were to return to Chattanooga, which proved true.

Dec. 7th. We started on the return march, and passed through the same places we did coming. If provisions had been scarce before, they were doubly so now; if our suffering from want of clothing, sickness, etc., had been great, it was increased tenfold now. It was December 16th and we had made a good march, those who were about barefooted having the privilege of picking their way. We went into camp as we supposed for the night. The clouds had looked threatening all day, indicating that a heavy storm was at hand. The troops had their tents and fires kindled, and were preparing their meagre supper, when we received orders from General Howard to make 15 miles farther, where he had established his headquarters. The boys fell in and grumbled. The storm that had been threatening all day now burst upon us in all its fury; the rain came down in torrents, the darkness was intense; except for the flashes of lightning now and then the men could hardly see their way over the rough road. Some cursed, others sung, while still others swore they would go no farther that night, when no enemy was pursuing nor being pursued, so they left the ranks and found shelter wherever they could. The majority of us plodded along through the sleet and rain until about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, when tired nature could stand no more, and the One Hundred and Forty-first settled down in an old cornfield. Some rolled themselves up in the blankets and tried to sleep, only to awaken in a short time to find their blankets frozen stiff and themselves so cold they could scarcely move; while others gathered brush and made fires, but the brush was so wet, that the fires gave out but little heat. And so we waited and watched for daylight to come.

Dec. 17th. At 6 a. m. we move on; we had no breakfast because we had nothing but empty haversacks. So we plodded along, and in the afternoon marched through the railroad tunnel under Missionary Ridge, and around the outskirts of Chattanooga and over a new macadamized road that had been built around the base of Lookout mountain during our absence, and in a short time were in our old quarters in Lookout valley, having been absent since November 22d, in which time we had marched 25 miles under the most difficult circumstances. No member of the One Hundred and Forty-first can ever, while life lasts, obliterate from his memory the suffering of that last night march — half starved and poorly clad as they were. The stragglers were coming in for a week after, and much sickness prevailed, and the seeds of disease, planted on the Kno ville march, are bearing fruit unto this day. Our quarters were rude and humble, but they looked like palaces to us, after the rough usage we had been subject to. Rations were still limited, as the most of them came by boat, and then hauled 8 or 9 miles from Kelly's Ferry; and the carrying capacity of these river boats was very limited indeed. It was a very common sight, the next two or three weeks, to see men around camp in their stocking feet, because they had no shoes, or without trousers, because there were none to be had, a pair of drawers doing duty for those useful garments. This was the state of affairs until the railroad was opened, and then clothing and rations were soon forthcoming.

1864. Jan. 25th. We broke camp and marched 20 miles to Shell Mound. We stay at Shell Mound Station until March 11th, when we moved our camp about one mile up into a ravine known as Nick-a-Jack Cove. We had plenty to eat and wear here and the duty consisted of drills, patrol, making and repairing roads, until May 2d, when, having been assigned some time previous to the Twentieth Army Corps, on the date mentioned we joined the First Brigade, First Division, at Shell Mound and marched to Whiteside.

May 3d. Marched toward Chattanooga, reaching Wauhatchie about noon, and the valley between Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge in the afternoon, and where we encamped for the night.

May 4th. Marching through a portion of the battlefield of Chickamauga, and at night we encamp on the banks of Chickamauga creek. There is nothing of interest until May 15th. We move along nearly every day, passing through Snake Creek Gap, and on the 14th we are feeling for the enemy nearly all day and conforming our lines to theirs, and at night find ourselves on a wooded ridge in line of battle, where we had come hurriedly to the support of the Fourteenth Army Corps. But our Third Brigade had helped them out of their trouble by the time we arrived. We lay with our harness on all night in line of battle.

May 15th. Battle of Resaca, an account of which you already have.

"THE MARCH TO THE SEA."

1864. Nov. 15th. The One Hundred and Forty-first New York Volunteers, under command of Captain William Merrill of Company "D," brigade under command of Colonel (James L.) Selfridge, Forty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, left the smoking and ruined city of Atlanta and marched out, in an easterly direction, toward Decatur, Ga., a small village about six miles from Atlanta on the Augusta railroad. Reached Decatur about noon and halted for dinner. In the afternoon the march was resumed; encamped that night near Stone Mountain.

Nov. 16th. Troops on the march at an early hour. The One Hundred and Forty-first strung out in two ranks along the Wagon Train. Crossed the Yellow river at a late hour, marched a short distance and went into camp.

Nov. 17th. One Hundred and Forty-first occupy same position on the march as the day before (guarding Wagon Train), which the boys begin to find tedious and not at all to their liking, as some wagon was continually breaking down or would get stuck in mud holes, thereby blocking everything behind them and causing the mule-drivers to unload their vocabulary of cuss words at the long-eared animals hauling the aforesaid wagons. But it was not considered any sin in the Army for a mule driver to swear; it was considered a necessary evil. Crossed Big Haines creek late in the afternoon. Went into camp just before the midnight hour.

Nov. 18th. Again guarding Wagon Trains. If a wagon breaks down it is burned to prevent it doing the enemy any good in the future. If a mule gives out, he is shot, for the same reason. The boys are beginning to utilize the time when the Wagon Train is delayed from any cause, in the following manner:—In the daytime, by visiting nearby plantations and helping themselves to chickens, sweet potatoes, turkeys, geese, ducks and pigs—in fact, anything and everything eatable that seems to strike their fancy. Passed through the little hamlet of Social Circle, Ga., about noon; halted for dinner just beyond the village. March resumed in an hour, making camp about 11 p. m.

Nov. 19th. Again on the march. This country gets better, and provisions for both man and beast more plentiful as we advance. The potato holes are just bursting, they are so full, and the poultry and pigs are just waiting for us to come and rescue them from the Confederacy. This diet beats hard-tack and sowbelly all to pieces, but these citizens will have a hard time to get enough to eat after we have passed. We pass through Madison, Ga., about 4 p. m. It is much the finest place we've seen on this march. There are many fine residences, the door-yards decorated with the most luxurious shrubbery. The whole colored population seems to have turned out to see the Army pass and a good share of them are following it away, they know not where, but its "the Day of Jubilee" to them, and with all their earthly effects packed into a bundle, pail or washtub, and nicely balanced on the head, they follow "Sherman's Bummers" away. There were old Poms, young Poms, She Poms and pickanin-nies, and as they trudge along they form a grotesque procession and one that should be seen to be appreciated. Encamp about four miles beyond Madison.

Nov. 20th. The One Hundred and Forty-first are rear guard of the Twentieth Army Corps. Do not leave our camp until 1 p. m. This means a march for us that will reach well into the night. Commenced raining about 4 p. m.; rained very hard all night. During the evening a two-wheeled ox cart containing young darkies, drawn by an ox hitched in the fills, and led by an old colored man, became stuck in a creek; the boys pulled the pin and dumped the young darkies in the creek, which was not deep. It afforded them great amusement to see the old Aunties fish the young mokes out of the stream. Went into camp about midnight.

Nov. 21st. We are on the move again at 7 a. m. The roads are heavy and muddy from yesterday's rain, and travel is extremely difficult. We are living on the fat of the land; somebody stop us or we will burst with turkey and sweet potatoes. Made camp about 10 p. m.

Nov. 22nd. It froze the mud a little last night, making travel a little better to-day. Details are at work destroying the railroad as we move along. Crossed the little river on pontoons to-day. The railroad bridge was burned, making a grand conflagration. This is a magnificent farming country, and we pass many fine residences. We reach and pass through Milledgeville during the afternoon; crossed the Oconee river and encamped on a wooded knoll at the right of the road. It is rumored that many of the citizens have gone out into the country to visit their relatives until we pass by.

Nov. 23rd. Very frosty; it froze quite hard during the night. We do not march to-day, and the men are helping themselves to anything they want. Many messes are eating their noonday meal from Queensware, spread out on nice white tablecloths, which they have borrowed for the occasion from the families who suddenly had business out of town when they heard we were coming, and which Queensware will doubtless be found by its owners (if it ever is) just where the boys left it previous to taking their departure from the city. In the afternoon a detail from the One Hundred and Forty-first, accompanied by others, went out and destroyed many miles of railroad. This was done by upsetting long sections of it, ties, stringers and rails, then knock them apart, pile up ties and stringers, lay the rails on top of the heap, then fire the heap. When the rails were heated in the middle, the ends being cold, they were easily bent out of all shape for use on a railroad until introduced to a rolling mill. But our friends on the other side have no time for that just now. The railroad bridge across the Oconee is burned this evening; besides large fires from public buildings and stores illuminate the country for miles around. Many of the boys are displaying Georgia bonds and Confederate money, which they have purloined from some building in their wanderings to-day, the purchasing power of which is fast departing.

Nov. 24th. The march resumed at 5 a. m. The roads are frozen and the air frosty; everything goes along smoothly to-day. One of Company "C's" men was about to take the last hog a man had to-day, when he protested so strongly that the "bummer" compromised with him by offering a $100 Confederate bill, which pleased him, for he accepted it readily, remarking that he could buy 5 or 6 hogs for that money back in the country.

Nov. 25th. Again on the march, shortly after daylight. About 10 a. m. come to a stream that will have to be bridged. About 2 p. m. crossed the stream and are again on the move. (The stream was called Buffalo creek.) After marching 5 or 6 miles, the head of the column was fired upon by some Confederate cavalry. A skirmish line is thrown out to develop their position; pickets are posted and the troops go into camp for the night. Some firing on the picket line during the night. This is the first opposition since leaving Atlanta.

Nov. 26th. Move out of camp about 9 a. m. There is quite brisk firing at the head of column, but we move along with very little delay, the enemy falling back as our troops advance. About noon we enter and halt for dinner at the village of Sandersville. Our enemy consists of some cavalry and a few citizens calling themselves "The Home Guard of Sandersville," and who were nearly all captured and "marched to the Sea," with Sherman's bummers, as prisoners. Marched to and encamped for the night at Tennile Station.

Nov. 27. The march resumed at daylight. First Brigade, First Division, Twentieth Army Corps, on the lead; One Hundred and Forty-first New York at the head of column; Company "C" about one-quarter of a mile in advance with the Corps scouts. This is a grand country, overflowing with good pigs, poultry and sweet potatoes. Many a good mule and horse is also being confiscated these days. The wagon train mules are daily being recruited; also the camp negroes, every three or four privates having a servant, which they have hired for from $10 to $12 per month. It makes but little difference to the private what wages he's agreed to pay; he won't do it. But when the march is ended, he will discharge the coon with a promise to pay when in funds. We moved along nicely to-day, making splendid time. About 3 p. m. a barricade was discovered across our road, on a rise of ground, just where it entered a piece of woods. The One Hundred and Forty-first deployed as skirmishers and advanced. Suddenly there was a puff of smoke, a report, and 8 or 10 Confederate cavalrymen were seen scampering from behind that railpile. At the same time a number of bullets whistled harmlessly over our heads. We pushed on rapidly after and discovered them trying to burn a bridge that here spanned a small stream. The cornstalks they were using for kindling wood were damp, together with the near proximity of the One Hundred and Forty-first's skirmish line caused their efforts to end in failure. They retreated to a ridge on the opposite side of the village of Davidsboro, on the Central Railroad of Georgia, which we were now entering, and where we encamp for the night, while the corps scouts drive the enemy from view.

Nov. 28th. We are engaged at tearing up and burning the Central Railroad of Georgia. We made about twelve miles to Spier's Station to-day, leaving a track of ruin and desolation behind us. The course we have traveled during the day can be traced by the reflection of the burning ties and bridges on the sky to-night; it is truly "a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night."

Nov. 29th. Again engaged in tearing up and destroying railroad tracks and bridges. Reach Bartow's Station about 5 p. m. Burned a sawmill and large amount of lumber. Anything an enemy could make use of is destroyed.

Nov. 30th. We have left the railroad and again we are marching with the wagon trains.

Nov. 30th, Dec. 1st and 2nd. Are marching with the wagon train. As we near the coast the country is not so good. There are vast stretches of low ground covered with sand as white as snow and very difficult to travel through. The forage for either man or beast is not so plentiful, but by sending out large foraging parties, have no trouble in obtaining all we want. The boys are becoming adepts at finding articles that these Southern families had secreted from them. What they do not find, I am afraid is not there, for they will search every place, even to a grave, for hidden treasure. The negroes are all loyal to the "boys in blue." The enemy's cavalry are now showing themselves daily, but they are not strong enough to bother us much. They do occasionally capture some of our foragers, who are altogether too venturesome.

Dec. 3rd. Near Millen. Country sandy and plenty of second-growth timber. The march is telling on some of the new recruits received before leaving Atlanta, diarrhoea being the prevailing complaint, caused, no doubt, by the diet or water.

Dec. 4th. Nothing of importance. The heads of columns of the different corps are all meeting with more or less opposition, but not enough to cause any delay.

Dec. 5th. Still on the march. This country through which we are now passing is alternated with patches of sand and marsh. The wagons often get stuck in the mud, causing long and tedious marches in the night to come up with the advance. Some of the boys occupy their time during these waits playing chuckluck, draw and whiskey poker.

Dec. 6th, 7th and 8th. Country about the same as the three preceding days. There is now less individual foraging done than at the beginning of the march, as many of the boys have been captured, while thus engaged, by venturing too far alone. A whole, or half, of a company goes out together nowadays and forages for the balance of the regiment. We are on what is known as the middle road to Savannah, which city, the rank and file have concluded, is our destination.

Dec. 9th. We are again marching along a splendid turnpike road, with stone mile posts giving the distance to Savannah. Country low and quite thickly wooded with second-growth, interspersed with swamps. About noon one of these thickly wooded swamps — Monteith's Swamp — was reached, and where our road passed through it the enemy had felled large trees across it, and had also built a small dirt fort to command it, into which they had a section or two of artillery, with which they commenced to shell us as we came in sight. The First Brigade was ordered to wade the swamp, while the Second Brigade went around to the left, to come in on the enemy's flank and rear. The One Hundred and Forty-first waded the swamp just at the left of the road, jumping from bog to bog, sometimes miring in the black, inky mud and water to their waists. After perhaps half an hour they had wormed themselves up so close to the fort that they could hear the enemy talk. In a short time a yell was heard from the flanking column, and at the same time we rushed forward and over the enemy's works; but the enemy, doubtless smelling a mouse, had skedaddled just too soon for us. We now went into camp for the night.

Dec. 10th. We are early on the march, following the same road used the day before. We come to several plantations and help ourselves to potatoes, rice and pigs. Some one in advance of us has taken the chickens and turkeys. At the rate we are marching, and the number of miles to Savannah, indicated by the mile-posts, it wont take long to make it. All the forenoon we hear the boom of cannon in our front (this was confederates training their guns on our road). About noon the mile-posts indicate 5 miles to the city. We move out of the road into the forest and move forward until the line was parallel with an old road that bordered an immense swamp and ran down to the Savannah river, which was about one mile to our left. A picket line was established about 80 or 100 yards in front, on the extreme edge of this swamp, which at this point was from 200 to 300 yards across. The enemy's pickets were posted on the opposite side of the swamp. Their earthworks were also in plain view.

Dec. 11th to Dec. 19th. Good substantial earthworks are built. Our rations are pretty small, as we have cleaned out the country in our rear of provisions, and Hardee with a large force, in our front. There is a mill for shucking rice about ten miles in our rear, in which the negroes, who are with us, in large numbers, are set to work preparing the rice for the use of the army. On the 13th, communication with the fleet that had been "waiting and watching " below. We received mail from home once more, and sent our good fat letters away, telling of the wonderful things we have done since leaving Atlanta. The enemy has a floating battery with which they shell us unmercifully every night. They run up the river until opposite our left flank and then let go for us. Nearly every tent in the One Hundred and Forty-first is barricaded with logs of trees, and even then these shells burst over us and the pieces come down through the tents. They are altogether too free with their hardware. They also drop shells into, and send solid shots through, our camps any time of day or night they think about it. The amount of it is, its mighty dangerous, and the only safe place is on the picket line. The Confederate pickets asked us last night how many mules we had eaten. We denied the allegation. Thank God, we have not come to that yet, nor do I believe we will, if the signs are true, for they are planting some siege guns in position to-night that will wake those fellows up across the swamp to the queen's taste. Last night too they drove Geary's Division all up into our camp to avoid the shells from their river battery. Provisions are pretty low; the cattle we would not eat on our way here comes very acceptable now, and the livers are worth a dollar and the tails fifty cents.

Dec. 20th. The shelling to-night from the river battery and from their works in our front is unusually severe, the flying pieces striking our tents and barking the trees.

Dec. 21st. The enemy's fire suddenly ceased about 3 o'clock this morning, when it was soon learned that they had evacuated. We were in line by daybreak, crossed the swamp on some narrow paths on top of the dykes, and there we laid for several hours. We see troops pouring into Savannah from all directions. We pass through a portion of the city about noon, march about one and one-half miles up the river and encamp in a forest of live oaks, which, with the large tufts of Spanish moss hanging from their branches, made a very picturesque appearance. Many of the men went to the city and helped themselves to the abundance of rice, found stored there, while the camp was being marked out. Received a mail and drew rations of hardtack, pork and coffee, this evening. Everybody feels like celebrating to-night; the great march has been a success. Although Hardee and his army have escaped, we still have Savannah, with all her forts, stores and ammunition, cars and locomotives. We've left a track of ruin and desolation in our rear, from 30 to 40 miles wide. The amount of damage,—the blows inflicted to the Confederacy by this march from Atlanta to Savannah, is inestimable.

Dec. 22d. The boys are all busy building good quarters, as the prospects seem very good to stay here some time. There is plenty of good material here for the getting. There is a vast swamp between us and the river. The old river battery the enemy shelled us so unmercifully with a few nights ago is sunk over near the South Carolina shore, her smokestack just showing above the water. Let her rest. The time until December 30th was occupied in fixing up quarters, cleaning up, mending clothes and equipments, for the campaign had been pretty hard on clothing and equipments. The health of the boys, as a rule, is good; the most of the sickness that does prevail is among the recruits, who are not used to such vigorous campaigning.

Dec. 30th. There is a general review to-day, and that means a move of some kind before many days. The Twentieth Army Corps, as it passed in review before General Sherman, presented a neat and soldierly bearing. Our dress parades have been resumed, and we also have a new Cornet Brigade Band that has just arrived from Boston, Mass. I understand they will be paid by a tax on the commissioned officers' pay. That will be good enough for "we uns." We occasionally get passes and visit the city, where sutlers are selling apples at six for one dollar, and other things in proportion. General Geary's Second Division, Twentieth Corps, is doing duty in the city. Details from the various commands are daily at work on the fortifications and thus we put in the time daily until January 17, 1865, when we start on the Carolina Campaign. An account of our daily moves on that campaign I can furnish with the exception of loss by disease.

Loss of the 141st.

APPENDIX "K."

FOR A BETTER SYSTEM OF KEEPING MILITARY RECORDS.

THE STATE HISTORIAN'S PROJECT FOR THE CREATION OF THE OFFICE OF REGIMENTAL RECORDER—ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST IT BY DISTINGUISHED SOLDIERS.

Any person who carefully peruses the Official Records of the Rebellion will deplore the absence of many essential details and the presence of many needless errors, that were perhaps unavoidable, because of the inexperience, pressure of official responsibilities and lack of military training of the officers who were charged with the keeping and filing of records of a regiment. Nor are these deficiencies confined solely to officers of volunteers. A number of instances can be cited where the reports of graduates of West Point, trained and educated soldiers, were returned because of incompleteness, in essential details that any officer of six months' experience in the field would have remedied. The most lamentable cases, however, are those where regiments were cut to pieces in action, and no official reports were filed. The commanding officer may have been killed, the next in command may have been inefficient or careless, and the brigade commander prejudiced against the organization or its commandant. Then again, the Official Records are conspicuously deficient in the matter of the work of detached commands. This criticism applies particularly to the cavalry arm of the service. Up to the action at Kelly's Ford, our cavalry was regarded as fit only to protect trains, to scout in small bodies, and to guard the flanks of army corps or the army itself. Commanding officers failed to acquire the habit of making reports; for the last three years of the war this indifference continued to the marked detriment of an arm of the service that eventually became one of the greatest in the history of the civilized world.

So far as army regulations were concerned, every precaution seems to have been taken for the proper preparation and protection of the records, for their maintenance in the field and for their filing with the headquarters of the army. The adjutant of the regiment was supplied, or was supposed to be supplied, with the requisite number of blanks and of forms on which the records of the regiment were to be kept. But, unfortunately, there were adjutants who were attentive to their duties and there were adjutants who were not. Then, again, in justice to some, duties were onerous, fighting was continuous and the time and facilities for performing their labors were uncertain — united with the danger of death, wounds and capture — that it is not at all surprising that many records were never made and that others that were, were lost before reaching their destination at Washington.

How many times during the war the adjutant was called upon to command a company or a regiment, his original duties falling to the lot of a subaltern who was careless, untrained or inefficient. The question that naturally comes to any person who is interested in the acquisition and preservation of military historical data is, "What improvement, if any, can be made upon the system in use during the War of the Rebellion, should the United States be involved in another war?"

To that end, last June the following communication was sent to eighty-six regular army officers on the active and retired list, special attention being given to general officers who commanded large bodies of troops during the War of the Rebellion:

Sir.—A careful examination of the Official Records of the Rebellion discloses throughout a deplorable absence of detailed information necessary to the complete history of the various volunteer organizations that served throughout the War of the Rebellion. This condition of affairs can readily be understood—through casualties to officers who kept regimental books, by the capture, by death and wounds, and to the capture and destruction of trains, army and railway, to the greenness of new officers and by the negligence and indifference of commanders of regiments, and especially of detachments. The valuable material thus lost, so useful in perfecting the historical records of regiments, is incalculable.

With a view of profiting by the errors of our last war, and of establishing a system that would obviate in the future the loss of such valuable material, and of insuring the perpetuation of every detail of a regiment or detachment in the field, the following proposition is submitted for whatever criticism you may see fit to make:

Attached to every regiment shall be a commissioned officer who shall be known as the recorder of the regiment; who shall be under the general authority of the adjutant-general of the army; whose work shall be separate and distinct from that of the adjutant of the regiment; who shall be a non-combatant; who shall devote himself to preparing and keeping all records involving the movements of the regiment or any part thereof while in the field; who shall forward direct to the adjutant-general daily, or as frequently as events justify, all movements of the regiment or detachments thereof, filing the name of the commanding officer of the regiment, or of the detachment, with the number of men actually engaged, or if a detachment the number carried with the detail from every company or troop that constitutes such detachment; who, before a regiment or a detachment goes into action, shall personally learn the number of men to be engaged, and at the close of said action shall compile a list of casualties, by companies;

He shall have such assistants, who shall also be non-combatants, as, in the judgment of the adjutant-general, may be necessary; Upon the termination of any engagement or skirmish, he shall formulate a succinct report, without comment or recommendations, except as to his own department, giving in each case the name of the officer in command of the regiment or detachment, the number of the brigade, division and corps to which the regiment or detachment was attached, and the part said regiment or detachment took, the said report to be indorsed by the commander of the regiment or detachment.

The recorders of regiments and their assistants shall be carefully selected men, conspicuous for good penmanship and general intelligence, and shall be held to the strictest accountability for accuracy of statement, particularly in the matter of dates, the spelling of proper names and of officers, men, and geographical places.

With great respect, I have the honor to remain, sir,

Yours very truly,

(Signed)

HUGH HASTINGS,

State Historian.

It was expected beforehand that every officer with fighting blood would object to the proposition of adding an additional non-combatant to the army. In view, however, of the casualties that happened to the men who occupied the front line of battle, the risks which any man under fire would be exposed to, and the absolute necessity of having an officer on the ground whose mind would be charged with but one idea and not littered with the multifarious responsibilities of an adjutant, the creation of the office of recorder seemed to be justified as the simplest and most certain means of effecting the results contemplated.

The replies that have been received indicate as great a variety of opinion as would be found among twenty doctors in a critical and mysterious case.

General S. writes:

"I would suggest that the important duty of recorder could be performed by the adjutant, if it were positively required of him by the regulations and he was authorized to employ a clerk to assist him in the work. It would also be well for the A. G. O. to provide suitable blank books, with appropriate headings, indicating the information which ought to be recorded every day.

"It is very important that a daily record be kept of every command, from a regiment up to an army. But the objection is very great to increasing the number of non-combatant officers in an army. Indeed, none of the staff like to be considered quite in that light, but prefer to be called on to act with the military staff to assist the commander in battle.

"The modern development of stenography has made easy what was before very difficult if not impossible. Now, every commander, from a colonel up, ought to have at his side at all times a good stenographer, to take down at his dictation a complete record of events as they occur, and transcribe it in ink every night. Such a 'recorder' would be of lower grade than commissioned officer, but would be the more useful on that account. The record would be that of the commander and not that of a subordinate."

General W. writes:

"I most heartily indorse the idea presented in your communication of the 17th inst. of the appointment of a commissioned officer for each regiment in active service in the field, whose exclusive duty shall be the preparing "all records involving the movements of the regiment or any part thereof while in the field, etc."

"I would however suggest the extending the idea to each and every distinct organization above the regiment—that is, to brigades, divisions, army corps and the army itself. My own experience fully sustains the necessity for such officers if we are to have full and satisfactory records of the movements of an army and fractions thereof, in skirmishes, engagements and battles. I recognize how useless it is to expect commanding officers, from the colonel to the general, to prepare full and reliable reports in addition to their more immediate and pressing duties of command, without the assistance of such an officer as you propose, whose sole duty shall be to collect and record the movements of the command with which he is connected. Such officer, in the performance of his duty, should be independent of the commander of the immediate organization to which he is attached. His reports should, however, be submitted to his immediate commander for his approval, or for such remarks and corrections, by indorsement as he may feel called upon to make, before they are forwarded to the higher commander.

"I am aware that these suggestions of mine are outside of and beyond your scheme, which is limited to state organizations—that is, to regiments, and I add them only to show the desirability and indeed the necessity of the services of an officer with every command whose exclusive duties shall be the preparation of reports of everything pertaining to the movements and fighting in which the command has part."

General P., who also commanded a corps, writes:

"I have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 21st instant, and to assure you that I coincide heartily in your suggestion for a complete record of the services of regiments during the war—heretofore rarely, if ever made and kept.

The need of such record is now daily manifested by the absence of proof of data claimed in many applications for pensions. It is due the U. S. Government and the State as well as the applicant."

General B.:

"Your letter of the 17th inst. has been received. I am much interested in the subject of it, and I appreciate the importance of having every occurrence, even those very trivial, truthfully recorded and presented for the use of historians, but I think the task would encounter more difficulties than are at first apparent.

"There are two parties to every military occurrence in time of war and if one is successful the other must have been defeated. The latter will suppress the truth if he possibly can and the other will be equally—in magnifying his achievement. When the reports reach Washington as they should, according to regulation, it is not very long until they come under the control of an interested party, either as Secretary of War or General or Adjutant-General, and he will destroy all that is unpleasant to him. It was to stop this destruction that the Records of the Rebellion have been printed. At least so I have been told. A regimental recorder appointed as you suggest would record only what his colonel permitted him to report, and that is the duty of the adjutant to-day.

"I do not suppose that (it) would be possible to reach anything like the truth of what is going on in Cuba to-day on either side, and if it were known, the government would not permit it to be recorded or even told confidentially. The same would be the case in Turkey and Greece and indeed everywhere else. I don't think your plan would work in war. We had some generals who carried with them newspaper men to write them up regardless of the truth."

General M.:

"I am in receipt of your communication of June 15th, in which you invite me to criticise a plan that you have to prevent the loss to history of valuable records during the war. In it you suggest that the Record Keeper should be a non-combatant and have other qualifications, which, to my mind, are very necessary. There are objections to the plan which might be urged and it is submitted that the army regulations provide for keeping records by the adjutants and other officers of the regiment such as you propose. There is no surety that other special representatives would not be as neglectful as are the officers of the regiment in time of active service. Another suggestion which comes to my mind is the fact that these men, moved by partiality or prejudice, might do a great injustice in making their reports. However, if the matter of expense would not prevent, I think that your plan might result in a very excellent record being kept."

In another letter the General writes:

"I think your scheme a very good one, and, with a due degree of modification, it might be made the means of a very perfect record in time of war, which is all important."

General B.:

"I have gone over the matter very carefully, and would say that I am doubtful if any such scheme as that proposed by you could be made successful in time of war. A non-combatant element is not that which would be liable to see and note those things which you mention. A commissioned officer, who is a non-combatant would be in an anomalous, questionable position, and then too a recorder carrying out the ideas you suggest would be as liable to be shot down as any other.

"I agree with you that some system should be adopted which would make the records more reliable as regards the points indicated by you, but I am doubtful if the plan suggested by you would be feasible."

General:

"I am not prepared however to advocate attaching any more non-combatants to troops in the field than are absolutely necessary, as experience during the great War of the Rebellion showed how great an army of camp followers were maintained and what an incubus such persons were, either during an advance, a retreat or a great battle; they must be fed and frequently use up materials absolutely necessary for the fighting men of an army.

"Raw troops think but little of the future; they are making history and seldom think of recording it at the time.

"I can recall instances within my personal knowledge where within 48 hours after a great battle it was impossible for division commanders to agree upon the positions occupied by their troops during the day of the fight.

"Company commanders, assisted by their Lieutenants and 1st Sergeants could better keep the record of the work of their company, its losses, its successes and reverses, and could present these statements daily or weekly to the regimental Adjutant, retaining copies for the company records; the Adjutant could forward these to the Adjutant-General direct, whenever opportunity presented and thus regimental history would be recorded in the War Department as rapidly as it would be made.

"I think it would be far preferable to require from the fighting men, the reports of their companies, rather than to leave such matters to non-combatants, whose duties would be of a character that might not bring to them the assistance required from men who are frequently under fire.

"No one can keep a better or truer record of a company than its immediate commander, who knows every man by name, his character, personal habits and as a rule, his antecedents."

General S.:

"I take pleasure in stating that the plan you suggest contains the elements of efficiency and is on the right track.

"If you will consult a little volume entitled "Troops in Campaign," issued by direction of the President, in 1892, you will find, on page 28, that provision has been made for the keeping of field-notes, sketches, journals of marches, and other incidents pertaining to troops in time of war. These note-books are issued by the Engineer Department of the Army. I do not think they are sufficiently full in detail to cover all the points stated in your letter, but they are comprehensive enough to afford very valuable material. I would be pleased to see the plan you suggest submitted to a board of officers for such amendment and modification as might be considered wise, in its adaptability to the needs of the Army."

General W. places the following indorsement on the plan:

"I approve your suggestions. If they were adopted by all military organizations, state and national, errors would be avoided, and perfect records assured."

General C.:

"I beg, in answer to your favor of June 15th, just received, to advise you that in the light of our experience during the late war. I am opposed in toto to making any addition whatever to the non-combatants attached to regiments or fighting units. On the other hand, I would favor the enactment of a law devolving upon a separate corps (of which a small nucleus might be kept up in peace time), all administrative work not required for the immediate needs of the regiment, thus protecting its fighting strength from drafts that have been hitherto made upon it for such work.

"The loss of valuable information likely to arise through the circumstances attending our present organization, and methods which you mention, is concededly a defect. But I doubt whether the remedy you propose would not involve a more serious evil—that of giving to an officer, who does not go into battle, the opportunity of describing incidents thereof, if not to criticise the participants therein."

General A.:

"While from experience I realize how desirable it is that the history of each military organization should be complete, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the plan you suggest."

General A. suggests:

"That each regimental officer of the 'National Guard' be required to make a comprehensive report of all service in which he has taken a part as soon as the duty is performed—that is: a 1st and 2d Lieutenant to his Captain, a Captain, a Major and Lt.-Colonel, direct to the Regimental Commander, through the Adjutant, the Captain forwarding his Lieutenant reports.

"All these reports to be forwarded by the Regimental Commander with his own report to next higher authority, and so on until they all reach Headquarters.

"My idea is that this course may establish a habit which will prove its value in an active campaign, when most of the officers of our organizations must be men trained in the 'National Guard.'"

General H.:

"In time of war, judging from the neglected records of the past, it would be necessary to have a 'record officer,' whose sole duty it would be to keep the data—and no line officer would have the time or opportunity. He would have to be an extra officer attached to regiments, and for this legislation would be needed."

General W.:

"In reply would say, that some such plan as you suggest might do for the National Guard and army in time of peace, but I do not see how it would work practically in war time. As it is now, the history of each company is or should be given on the muster roll, for the period covered by the roll and thence be recorded on the regimental roll and transmitted, i. e., a copy of the history to the A. G's. of the state and army, where the records belong. In my experience in the field I found that the company and new regimental commanders failed to give sufficient data, but I do not see how you can dovetail a civilian into the business. This is not clear to my mind. I hope your correspondence with others and the concerted action of those interested in this movement will lead to a better system. It cannot be much worse."

General F.:

"Referring to the subject matter of your letter of the 17th, I have to say that while I admit that the matter of regimental records do not clearly show in detail many things historically interesting and well worthy of record, I do not believe that it will be possible to obtain such a thing as the appointment of a commissioned officer, a non-combatant too, for such purposes. It would be far too expensive and it is not a necessity; furthermore, we have too many non-combatants on the field now, in the way of surgeons, chaplains, and the hospital corps. Try for a good detailed enlisted man to be under control of the adjutant. You might get that by hard work."

General B.:

"My own experience leads to the view that this is unnecessary in time of peace and would fail in time of war to accomplish the desired purpose; it would not, I think, produce nearly as good results as having the records kept by the combatant officers as at present. * * * The expense of such an officer with his assistants would add considerably to the expense of a war, without apparently contributing to its successful prosecution. This would be a serious objection."

General V.:

"I certainly agree with you as to the necessity for measures to secure detailed information requisite to the complete histories of volunteer regiments in future disturbances or wars and thus to profit by the experience of the War of the Rebellion, wherein there was a marked failure to secure essential data necessary to perfect, and render valuable, the histories of the various organizations. But defects were the results of post, regimental, company and detached commanders, and inspectors, failing to comply with orders and instructions, even to the neglect of requirements and notes on the blank forms.

"I do not think that the office of regimental recorder should be created for the object specified in your letter. The Regimental Adjutant should continue to be charged with the duty; and the better to secure for him the requisite information, he should have the aid of post commanders, company commanders, mustering officers and inspectors. Through carefully prepared, rigid orders, the latter four classes could be made to see to it that all officers concerned, promptly and accurately supplied the required data.

"It is needless to add that all persons charged with making 'records of events' should be accurate, systematic and prompt, in all connected therewith.

"When regiments and other organizations shall have been brigaded, or when not assigned to brigades, assigned to departments, the Adjutant-General or the brigade or department, should be held to a rigid accountability that the officers of commands fully execute their parts, in order to secure the reliability of the information and the consequent perfection of all records."

General S.:

"I have carefully examined your plan, and consider the object you seek a very important one, but I think the present system will secure the results desired. I feel that a change from the present system is not desirable and cannot approve the substitute you propose."

Colonel G.:

"I consider your idea an excellent one and without discussing the details (which would be an after consideration by the authorities), I would merely suggest that at least so far as the regular army shall be affected, that the bureau of military intelligence be so enlarged in time of war as to give such an officer as you indicate to each regiment, and that the governor of each State establish such a bureau in connection with the office of Adjutant-General of the state."

Colonel H. suggests:

"That the recorder of every regiment in time of war shall receive the rank, pay and emoluments of a Captain of Cavalry.

"He shall have such assistants, enlisted clerks, with rank, pay and emoluments of Sergeants of Cavalry. The captain recorder of the regiment shall also report upon all men attached to his regiment or to its detachments; recording Regimental Sergeants serving with detachments before transmitting their reports to their regimental Captain Recorder, shall submit them to their detachment commander for his indorsement.

"The regimental Captain Recorder will keep a book containing copies of all reports made to the Adjutant-General with all indorsements thereon, said book to be the property of the regiment.

"Captain should be the grade of the Recorder, as of the lowest grade in the Adjutant-General's Department; as a Lieutenant he would be treated by the regiment as an 'idler' (in the navyman's sense of the word); as a Field Officer he would put on too many airs for good discipline in camp.

"I suggest Sergeant's grade for the clerks, because with no grade they would be guyed by all the soldiers. I should assimilate them with all cavalry to entitle them to mounts." An after thought: "These officers would save their pay to Government in post bellum times, by discouraging the multitude of false claims for pensions, with their accompanying expense for investigation."

Colonel C.:

"I think such an office would be of great utility, in view of the chaotic condition of the records of various regiments during the War of '61-65. In many cases this could not have been prevented as 'the historian' and his records would have been lost in some of the disasters. I am however of the opinion that Congress would not commission an additional officer for this purpose in the Establishment, and I therefore suggest that the Chaplain of the regiment should be ex officio the 'recorder' of the regiment, and that these duties should be made a part of what should be expected of him."

Colonel W.:

"I doubt the expediency of creating the suggested office. Under existing conditions there is no lack of record, so far as quantity is concerned, and the only improvement desired is in the quality. It does not seem to me that such improvement could be obtained in any other way than by the instruction of commanders and adjutants in a branch of military duty which we might term, "What to report and how to report it." There is no certainty that recorders having merely the qualifications of good penmanship and general intelligence, would not often show the same indifference and negligence as that which is to be deplored in some cases under existing conditions.

"The creation of the new office would increase the number of officers and the expense of the army, without adding in the least to the combatant strength. The functions of the adjutant and recorder would be likely to conflict and the recorder would be a source of friction that would be injurious to military efficiency. Even if the recorder were zealous in his duties, and tactful in his official intercourse with others, his interest in his regiment would often cause him to send in voluminous reports about mere trifles, and the task of the final historian would be greatly increased by the amount of chaff through which he would have to hunt for a single kernel of wheat. If the recorder were not an accomplished military man his reports would be of little value, even though they were perfect in rhetoric and conscientious as to fact; if he were an accomplished soldier his services could scarcely be spared from the combatant strength of the army.

"On the whole, therefore, I feel constrained to say that I do not think the creation of the office of regimental recorder would be in the interests of the military service."

Colonel C.:

"Your proposition is to formulate a well devised scheme by which the services of regiments, etc., in the field shall be closely followed, on the spot, so that valuable material may be obtained to perfect their historical records.

"The object is an excellent one, but practical experience in the field with troops during the War of the Rebellion has satisfied me that it would be very unwise to increase the number of non-combatants with armies in active service, and I am of the opinion that nothing would be gained by the scheme proposed towards preserving regimental records, as in my judgment the difficulty of doing so effectively is largely, if not wholly, due to causes that would affect the accuracy of the records, no matter by whom kept.

In time of active operations it is extremely difficult to observe the ordinary routine of keeping accounts and records, and the lapses which occur are due to that fact and not to the lack of proper officers to keep them. One difficulty, in this matter, during the late war, was the inability to secure adjutants and clerks versed in the preparation of military statistics. It could not be expected that these would be found, to any great extent, in our Volunteer armies during the period from 1861 to 1865, but it might not be so difficult at the present day as there is a much greater knowledge of military details on the part of the general public than there was thirty-six years ago.

"Camps during war are liable to seizure, including records, and not a trace may ever be found of the latter. Indeed, the historians themselves, if they accompany the armies to the field as non-combatants, must take their chances of death or capture and this alone would make the value of their service problematical.

"The object in view is a most desirable one, but difficult of achievement and certainly your consideration of the subject with a view to some better plan than we seemed to have in the late war is most commendable."

Colonel S.:

"Being familiar with the disadvantages which imperfect regimental returns entail on the government, I can well understand why you wish to introduce a system calculated to secure a more complete and reliable record.

"And I am strongly of opinion that all casualties, caused not only by the enemy's bullets, by sickness and captures, but also by desertion, should be reported direct to the Adjutant-General of the Army; the sending of such reports through intermediate commanders or the 'military channel' being sure to retard their receipt and likely to occasion their loss. The government has spent millions of dollars upon bona fide deserters, who through faulty records and under the authority conferred on the War Department by Congress for removing the charge of desertion under certain circumstances, have succeeded in having themselves 'rehabilitated,' and entered on the pension rolls. But I fear the appointment of an officer for the exclusive purpose of keeping the records would involve complications hurtful to discipline which would go far to offset the advantages likely to accrue therefrom.

"A form of return of casualties might be devised so comprehensive in its nature and so easy to fill out that the senior of the field or regimental staff officers present for duty at the end of an engagement and also at the end of say every month might be trusted to submit it direct and in proper form to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

"The subject is an important one, not only to the military historian, but also to the discipline and morale of the service and to the treasury of the United States."

Colonel C.:

"The proposition contained in your circular letter of the 21, June, does not entirely meet with my approval, mainly for the reason that it adds to the number of non-combatants, and to transportation and subsistence for horse and man when it is of paramount importance that these departments be burdened with the minimum of impedimenta.

"Also because the duties to be discharged by this numerous staff of Recorders are directly the duties of all commanding officers from the company up to the corps, and should be required of them and no excuse given for any neglect by allowing transfer to other hands, i. e., too many cooks and no broth.

"Also because the absence of the information you desire to collect is largely due to capture, accidents of flood and fire, interruption of lines of communication, destruction of depots, which would as fully affect the transmitted labor of the Recorder as of the Colonel.

"All the information in question should be on the muster-roll where it belongs and be put there directly by the immediate commanders. I doubt not these objections have occurred to you and have been nullified by facts and conclusions not now accessible to me."

Colonel H.:

"I believe your plan an excellent one, but it would require new laws to carry it out and it occurs to me, that the law-making powers in Congress, are very good people to get interested in the subject."

Colonel H.:

"The evidence that our records have been too imperfect and too carelessly preserved to enable the historian to find complete detailed information is abundant on all sides. The intent of the law organizing the Adjutant-General's department was that it should be the custodian of official reports, orders, letters, etc., and, if that law is broadly construed and faultlessly executed, there ought to be no difficulty in the matter.

"The system set forth in paragraphs 789-812, both inclusive, of the Army Regulations of 1895, is thoroughly sound. Every officer having a command has to make a report, and every report, from that of an officer out with a detachment of a company to the corps commander, is subject to review and correction by superior authority. These official reports are written by those who were active agents, or intelligent instruments, in executing a concerted plan of operations. These agents, or thinking instruments, are authorized in their various spheres of work to disregard detailed instructions for good and sufficient cause. The analysis of the situation which leads up to the breaking away from detailed instructions cannot be definitely known to others unless they are self-evident or stated by the commander concerned. The historian must necessarily depend upon him for his statement of the case. The recorder, who would simply write down the operations of the day, and so leave unexplained all deviations from instructions, would leave the historian materials that would damn many capable and conscientious officers. The material to serve the future historian, must, per force, be the work of those who were responsible. In case of the death of the responsible head where non-compliance with instructions has occurred, each writer must work out his own solution from the report of the facts as made by the person or persons engaged in the operations concerned.

"The system of having a 'double-track' adjutant-general's office I do not think practicable, and I think it would not stand after a trial. My own idea would be to seek correction by an improvement in the adjutant-general's department. This could be done in many ways, but, to meet the deficiency you mention, it might be aided very much by attaching to the headquarters of every general officer's command a non-combatant clerk whose only duty would consist in keeping, under the supervision of the commander, a careful record—a log— of events, and seeing that the required reports were promptly rendered, examined and forwarded. In nine cases out of ten such reports would have to pass through some superior who could supply deficiencies or correct misstatements that resulted from want of full knowledge of the operations in general, or from change of commanders by reason of casualties, etc."

Major S.:

"I beg leave to acknowledge your favor of June 17, and to say that the subject matter of it has interested me very much. As Adjutant of my regiment, after the late war I had an experience in compiling the history of the regiment similar to your own. The records were in great confusion and wanting in many of the ordinary details. The only reliable sources of information were the muster-rolls and these, not infrequently, were missing, having been lost or captured by the enemy.

"I certainly agree with you that some one should be placed in charge of the records of our Army during an active campaign, but whether the individual should be a non-combatant is a question about which I am not altogether clear. Circumstances would arise which would make the position of such an official, charged with that particular duty, very difficult. Theoretically we have now officers whose sole duty it is to look after the correspondence and official records of the Army; that they do not perform their duties completely is, in many instances, I am sure, the result of ignorance as much as carelessness. But of course they are merely compilers, receiving their information from other sources. As a matter of fact, if every company and detachment commander taking part in any military operation, would render the returns and records now required of them the difficulty that you mention would disappear absolutely. Therefore, it is not plain to me that even if we had such an official as you mention, to look after the records of the Army, he would be able to accomplish much unless all commanders gave him the necessary information. It occurs to me that what we need most is a simplification of the records and careful instruction in their preparation."

Major B.:

"I beg to say, in all frankness, that I do not consider your scheme at all feasible or necessary for the following reasons:

"1. An able-bodied commissioned officer (excepting doctors and chaplains) who in time of war is a non-combatant, would be a curiosity and such a class should not be encouraged. Only able-bodied men could do the work you speak of.

"2. Such work and reports as you require of the Recorder of the regiment are now all provided for. The casualties of war, however, will affect your Recorder to as great a degree as it will those now directed to furnish the information you desire, especially should he put himself in position to obtain it; so that you are no better off with him than you are now.

"3. Furthermore, in my opinion, the Recorder and his assistants might not be tolerated to any great degree and certainly would never be in as good position to obtain the data as the Adjutant of the regiment or the Adjutant-General of the brigade or other officers required by law and regulations to make the reports you mention.

"I am sorry to have to disagree with you in this matter, but I give you my candid opinion."

It will be observed that among the older officers, those who saw active field service during the war, who commanded large bodies of troops, and who understand the difficulties that stand in the way of looking after organization routine matters during an active campaign of fighting, the general proposition for the creation of the office of Recorder is either unqualifiedly endorsed or accepted with certain modifications. On the other hand, the younger officers, who came into the service toward the close of the war as subalterns, or who never served with a great army, disapprove the suggestion or condemn it absolutely.

Notice will be taken of but one criticism, that which appeared in the Army and Navy Journal of date, July 3d, 1897, in which the writer, with a self-complacency that is simply delightful, uses this language: "This plan (to establish the office of Recorder) strikes us as wholly impracticable, not to say absurd. It would be much better to adopt some method of securing competent men as adjutants of the volunteer regiments, and give them competent clerks."

How would this suggestion of the Army and Navy Journal operate in such a case as the battle of Cedar Mountain, wherein three regiments, the Twenty-eighth New York, the Forty-sixth Pennsylvania and the Fifth Connecticut, suffered the loss of every field officer and adjutant—the Twenty-eighth New York having, in addition, every company officer killed or wounded?

Let a careful examination be made of the Official Records of the Rebellion, and the following faults will appear as most conspicuous: Absence of necessary detailed information; inaccuracy of statement on the part of superior officers; for ignorance on the part of commanding officers with the names of subordinates and of spelling of geographical names; for general indifference to statement of fact in casualties; for vagueness of expression and indefiniteness of description of locality in which their commands operated, and for the omission of important historical data.

One of the most conspicuous faults of this character can be found in General Grant's telegram to the War Department on August 9th, 1864, announcing the great explosion at City Point. The last sentence of his dispatch reads: "As soon as the smoke clears away, I will ascertain and telegraph you." Two days later the smoke had apparently cleared away, for General Grant then reported the number of casualties, and closed the dispatch with the following sentence: "The damage to property was large but I have not the means of reporting it."

October 24, 1864, General Butler issued the following general order (No. 139):

General Orders,
No. 139.

HDQRS. DEPT. OF VA. AND N. C., ARMY OF THE JAMES, }
IN THE FIELD, October 24, 1864. }

"The transaction of business at these headquarters is constantly impeded by the inexcusable delay of subordinate officers in furnishing information required of them. This is true both in regard to regular returns and reports, and those specially called for.

Both promptitude and accuracy are peremptorily required, and no excuse will be considered valid, except that the troops are actually in action at the time. The fact that the men are engaged in fortifying or intrenching will not be accepted as an excuse for remissness of their officers, which must be chargeable simply to laziness and inattention.

Officers are once for all warned of the strict responsibility to which they will be held.

By command of Major-General Butler: "

ED. W. SMITH,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

February, 1865, General Hancock used the following language, in connection with his report of guns captured and lost from May 3d to November 1st, and list of colors captured and lost from May 4th to November 1st, 1864, of the Second Corps:

“WASHINGTON, D. C., February —, 1865.

“I desire to say in conclusion that the delay in the transmission of this report; its deficiencies in reference to the operations of the troops under my command during the battle, not belonging to the Second Corps, and the absence of many details of the movements of brigades and regiments of the Second Corps on that field, have been occasioned by the urgent and constant occupation of my time, absorbed as it was by the subsequent operations of the campaign, by the almost total absence of detailed reports from division, brigade, and regimental commanders, and lastly, as has been previously stated, by the nature of the ground on which the battle was fought, which made it impossible to observe the movements of the troops after they had entered the forest, whose thickets concealed the various incidents of the fight from all save those who were immediately engaged. These circumstances combined have not only prevented me from furnishing an accurate and minute report of the operations of the troops, but have unfortunately been the cause of the omission from this report of the names of very many brave officers and soldiers whose conduct richly entitled them to special mention and commendation.”

In detailing an action near Bermuda Hundred, Va., June 24, 1864, Colonel Edgar M. Cullen, of the Ninety-sixth New York, who commanded a brigade that consisted of the Eighty-first, Ninety-sixth, Ninety-eighth and One Hundred and Thirty-ninth New York reported:

“About 7 a. m. the enemy opened a heavy fire from probably twenty pieces, in battery on the left bank of the Appomattox, on the line occupied by this brigade. The fire enfiladed the pits, but having given the greatest possible attention to the traverses the night before, it was harmless. This lasted for an hour, after which the enemy, having greatly relied on the efficacy of their artillery fire, attempted to carry our works. They advanced probably in two lines of battle, but in a very short time were most handsomely repulsed. The line in advance not being able to retire was captured almost entirely, consisting of some 150, of whom 5 were officers. The attack did not extend beyond the front occupied by our brigade. The greatest credit is due both to the officers and men of this command, which the ease with which they repulsed the enemy only enhances.

"I have the honor to name Lieutenant-Colonel Raulston (Eighty-first New York), who took command after I received a sunstroke; Captain Kreutzer, Ninety-eighth New York Volunteers, and Captain Fitzpatrick, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers. Lieutenant Cooley, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, who went beyond the lines and brought in some prisoners, is especially worthy of mention."

No mention of this attack appears in any other way, nor anywhere else than in Colonel Cullen's report. More remarkable still, in the list of engagements furnished to this office by the surviving officers of the Eighty-first New York, Ninety-sixth New York, Ninety-eighth New York and One Hundred and Thirty-ninth New York, no allusion whatever is made to it; despite the fact that Colonel Cullen commends the services of the four commanding officers of those four regiments.

The author of the Recorder plan has no pride of opinion whatever in the matter, but submits it for what it is worth, with the full consciousness that in many respects, particularly in many matters of detail, the Official Records of the Rebellion, as now published, reflect anything but credit upon the practical operations of the army organizations so far as the keeping of regimental records was concerned, between 1861 and 1865, and with the full confidence that in the course of time some modification of or improvement in that system will be made. In view of all the facts that have been brought to light, either the Colonel of a regiment or the Adjutant will have assigned to him a typewriter for duty at headquarters; or a mounted officer representing the Adjutant-General's Department will be detailed either from the regiment itself or from the general staff, who will relieve the Adjutant of all matters outside of mere camp routine, and who will specially undertake the arduous work of recording the history of the regiment or any detachment thereof, from the moment it is ordered to the front.*

* Since the promulgation of the advance sheets of this report, the attention of this office has been called to the excellent recommendation which was made nearly ten years ago, by that distinguished soldier and writer, Colonel William F. Fox, in his well-known and acknowledged authoritative publication entitled "Regimental Losses in the Civil War." During the progress of the stupendous undertaking which resulted in his giving to the world one of the most accurate and at the same time laborious publications connected with the War of the Rebellion, Colonel Fox early saw the necessity of reorganizing the system that was in use during the War of the Rebellion, for the collection of regimental returns and records, and of having detailed an officer whose duties should be confined to compiling the history of his organization. Colonel Fox's language is as follows:

"In each regiment there should be some officer, attached to the non-commissioned staff, who should be entrusted with the care and preparation of the regimental statistics and casualty lists; and this person should be exempted from all liability to accidents in battle, and should not be allowed to go into action. During such times as the regiment was not engaged in an active campaign, this officer would find ample employment in ascertaining the fate of missing men, and of the wounded and sick who were absent in hospital or on furlough. All statements of casualties in battle made by him should be accompanied by a report of the number engaged, and such statements, together with all other mortuary reports, should be made in manifold, one copy to be forwarded to the War Department and one to the Adjutant General of the State to which the regiment belonged. There should, also, be a definite agreement between belligerents that all captured records of this class should not be destroyed; and, that a full record should be carefully made of the fate of all prisoners within their respective lines.

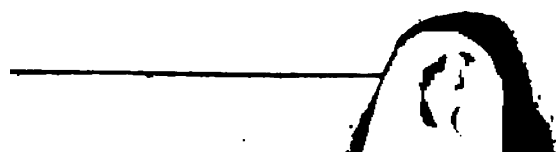

"To all this some may sneer and some will say, "Cui bono?" If so, let it be remembered that there are other reasons than money or patriotism which induce men to risk life and limb in war. There is the love of glory and the expectation of honorable recognition. But the private in the ranks expects neither. His identity is merged in that of his regiment. To him the regiment and its name is everything. He does not expect to see his own name on the page of history, and is content with a proper recognition of the old command in which he fought. But he is jealous of the record of his regiment, and demands credit for every shot it faced and every grave it filled.

"The bloody laurels for which a regiment contends will always be awarded to the one with the longest Roll of Honor. Scars are the true evidence of wounds and the regimental scars can be seen only in the record of its casualties. In our last war many a noble regiment lost the place in history to which it was entitled through a failure to file the proper records of its gallant deeds. Will it always be so?"

*Report of Jacob Leisler and Dirck Vander Clyff, of amounts due workmen at the Fort; that New Utrecht and Brooklyn only have paid their Contributions.

Jan. 17.

Pursuant, to the order of the Schout Burgomasters and Schepens on the last Court day, dated 17 January 1674 unto directing us, the undersigned, to examine the book regarding the fort, we have, accordingly, found therein as follows:

First. We find that the Burgesses of this place have paid in full and that these only are indebted to the workmen:

Jan Schouten	one-half beaver
Jacob Swart	2 skepels of peas
Benjamin Provvoost	2 beaver skins
Jaques	8 gl
Peter Nys	30 gl
Jan Nebson	20 gl
Isack Kip	4 gl
Abram Mol	7 gl and a note of 10 gl but unnegotiable.

We find that all the towns on Long Island remain still without paying, except New Utrecht and Breucklen which have paid.

We cannot find that Fort Orange, Schaenechtete or Esopus are debited in any part of the book; Yet is it notorious to all the world what the aforesaid places have promised and what they have performed

We find that Coely hath received a sum of six hundred guilders from New Utrecht and cannot find that said Coely has any claim or a stiver, and the said item of 600 gl. inserted in the book is written by a strange hand.

* The original is missing. What follows purports to be a translation.

I drew it forth and shewed it to him and when he had looked it over he ye said governor said, I vow this is a false order Contrary to my mind and the most of ye Court; I will charge no bodie but I know whoose it is I will look better into these things. I desired him to inform me what we should do seeing the order was Comed forth showing to him that y't order was very strang to us, for by y't order the Court had granted to Smith more than Smith did desire in his petition at ye Court in october, as also strang in as much as we conceaved y't ye soudt had been in Equitie alreadie; the governor Answered it was true, for the Jugment which the Court gave when it was tried was ether Equitie or nothing for it was not common law; then he bad us not troble ourselves no further about it for when he did returne from Conitticott, (Connecticut) he with his Counsell would send an order under his hand that should put a full period to any further debatt about the land. To our honored Governer Generall of the New Netherlands at ffort William Hendrick

The petition of the Inhabitance of the towne of Huntington.

Humbly showeth to your honer the great and Insufarable wrong and Iniury that hath been and now is contrifed against us your petitioners by Richard Smith of Nesaquake by his most iniust clames upon our lawfull Rights which wee have lawfully purchased and possessed about 18 years and have a patten for it given us by governer Nicholls In whos: time he never durst haive attempted a triall at law with us; but in Governer Lovelace time he commenced a suite at Law with us and was cast and from thence he Removed it to the court of Assizes where he was likewise cast and our title proved good in the highest court likewise so that seeing he could by no lawfull mence possible contineu his uniust and vexatius suite truble and molestation of your petitioners he Attempts a more wicked and desperate way to prolong his suits which is by contrivfing and Inventing a most abomenable slander Against our Towne and the witnesses that gave evidence in our case making it
 A great part of his work going from place to place to possess people with the same and did prefer a petitione to our then Governer wher in he did strongly desire another hearing and the Reason he did In the said petition Aleage was that he could prove periury on the witnesse sum of them or foriury by the Towne of Huntington by which both the Jeury and Court was mislead the which thing wee most humbly desire he may first doe before we may be obliged to any further hearing of the sayd difference, he hath by his subtelly and fals Information procured A sentence of court Against one Jeremiah Wood which was one of the witness In our cause which is much Admired at not only by all the towne and Country then present but all that hears of it we may bouldly say there is not one man in Long Island that hath any knowledge of it but doth believe that Jerimiah Wood is most horably wronged: but he makes use of his great advantage against us your poor petitioners the scout which married his own daughter did as we concieue procure such Judges to try the cause as might best suite his fathers end and we make no doubt such as his father did apoint. Therefore we most humbly desire that there may be first a hearing again of Jerimiah Woods cause before such Judges as Mr William Lerance shall have no choice of neither may be set as Judge in that cause for we question not but we can prove from his own mouth he expects A part of that land he molest Huntington for: to have it for his wifes portion and so he becomes a party in that cause: we desire your honner to consider the wicked and unrightus ways Smith used o further vex and trouble us he did before charge to othere of our witnesses with periury and being sined by them and cast in court e makes a publick Acknowledgtt that he had don them wrong and nce sees that he cannot go on with his vexatius siute with your etitioners without he slanders the witness he charges the same men e Aquited before he hath made it his common practice to vex and molest & threaten Juarimen And Labour to cause the witnesses to ve new evidence that he might compare them together and if he n find the lest variation in Curconstans or misplacing A word or ther be but A word miseplad [Sic] he then sees thay ar for sworn id lays snars to Intrap honest men, Thereby regarding not whom e slanders and although persons so wronged by him be never so uch unsatisfied they dare not sum of them siue him to cleare ere Inosency because he is a person so contentius y't if once they gin A contryvercy with him ther is no hope that they shall ever

The Land Called N. York & other parts in America now Called N. East Jersey was first discovered by Sebastian Cabbitt a Subject of England in King Henery ye 7th time a bout 180 years Since & afterwards further by S'r Walter Raleigh in ye Reign of Queen Eliz. & after him by henery Hudson in ye Reign of King James and also by the Lord Delaware & begun to be planted in ye year 1614 by Dutch & English; the Dutch placed a Governour there but upon Complaint made by the King of England to ye States of Holand the S'd States Disown'd ye Bisness & Declar'd it was only a Private undertaking of ye West India Company of Amsterdam, So ye King Cales of England Granted a Com'son: to S'r Edward Layden to plant these parts Calling them "New Albion" & ye Dutch submitted themselves to ye English Govermt. but in King

Severall Pe'sons took Grants of Lands from Coll. Nicoll ye Dukes Gover. Severall of ye Planters have purchased of ye Indians but Refuse to pay any acknowledgment to ye Kings Grantees.

Q. 1st Wither ye Grants made by Coll. Nicolls are good agt. the assigns of ye Ld Berckley & S'r George Cartrett.

Q. 2d Wither the Grant from ye Indians be Sufficent to any Planter without a Grant from ye King or his Assignes.

Ans. 1st To ye first Question the authority by which Coll. Nicholls acted Determined by ye Dukes Grant to Ye Ld Berckly & S'r George Cartrett & all Grants made by him afterward (tho according to ye Comison) are void for ye Delegated power w'th Coll Nicolls had of making Grants of ye Land could Last no Longer then his Mas. interest who gave him y't Power & ye having or not having notice of ye Duke's Grant to ye Lord Berckly & S'r Georze Cartret makes no Difference in ye Law but ye want of Notice makes it Great Equity y't ye Pr'sent Proprit. Should Confirm Such Grants to ye people who will Submit to the Conssions & payments of the Pr'sent Proprioters Quitt rents otherwise they may Look Upon them as Desseizors & treat them as such.

makes ye Discovery hath ye Right of the Soyle & Govermt. of y't place & no people can plant there without ye Consent of ye Prince or of such P'rsons to whom the Right is Devoulved & conveyed. The practice of all Plantations has been according to this & no people has ben suffered to take Up Land but by ye Consent & Lycence of ye Gov'r or proprietiers under ye Princes' title whose people made ye first Discovery & upon their Submition to ye Laws of ye place & contribution to ye publick charges of the place & ye payment of such Rent & other value for ye Soile as ye Propriet'rs for ye time being Require & though it hath been & still is ye usuall Practice of all Propriet'rs to give their Indians Some Recompence for their Land & so seems to Purchase it of them Yet yt is not done for want of Sufficient title from ye King or Prince who hath ye Right of Discovery but out of Prudence & Christian Charity Least otherwise the Indians might have destroyed ye first planters (who are usually too few to Defend themselves) or Refuse all Commerce: and conversation w'th ye planters & thereby all hopes of converting them to ye Christian faith would be Lost in this the Common Law of England and ye Civil Law doth agree and if any Planter be Refractory & will Insist on his Indian purch'se and not Submit to this Law of Plantations ye Proprie's who have made ye Title under ye Prince may deny them ye benefit of ye Laws and Prohibitt Commerce with them as Opposers & Enemy to ye Publick peace. Besides tis observable yt. no man can goe from England to plant in an English Plantation without Leave from ye Govermt. & therefore in all Pattents & grants of Plantations from ye King a Particular Lycence to Carry Over Planters is incerted w'ch Power in Prohibitting is now in ye Proprie'rs as ye King Assigns; and therefore tho some planters have purchased from ye Indians yett having done

Nov. 11.

The first part is congratulatory, for the Governors safe arrival & reducing of New Yorke, desiring a friendly Correspondence & Com'erce between the Colonies.

The next relates to the occasion & time of the first settlement of Roade Island, their Endeavors to gain a patent from King Charles the first which was obstructed by the breaking out of the Civill Warres in England & their obtaining a Charter from his present Ma'tie at his Restoura'con wherein they were like to be circumvented by Conecticut Agents who thought to haue swallowed up part of that Colony within their bounds, their Patent having the first date; but upon Complaint was arbitrated betweene the Agents of the two Colonies by the Kings advice & the bounds betweene them stated & by his Ma'ties Graunt determined that Pawcatuck al's Narrigansett should be ye bounds betweene the two Colonies.

And further declares the s'd bounds to be allowed & approved by the Kings Commission'rs, the land betweene which, what those of Conecticut would imagine to be the Narragansett River they called the Kings Province, & betrustrd the Jurisdiction, thereof to the officers of Roade Island Colony untill the Kings pleasure was further knowne, whereupon they had possession of that Jurisdiction for ten years at least

After which Connecticut disturbs one of Road Is'l Townes next them & would force them to remove in the winter but tooke their promise to submit in the spring & so gott them under them.

The last su'mer Conecticut would have forced the Kings Province to come under their Jurisdiction, but for that time were withstood by the Governo'r of Roade Island & Councell in P'son.

It was lastly offered by Roade Island that if Conecticut were not satisfied they would referre it to the Kings determinacon, that would not be accepted but they would referre it to the United Colonies which were as to themselves. It was also offered by Roade Is'l to be referr'd to his R. H's Governor which they would accept of neither.

So with Civill Expressions Concludes.

William, Earle of Starling, the thirteenth day of october, 1641 and granted by them to the ten first purchasers the 2. 5. 1659, and the right of the Indian Sachims the tenth day of May 1660 before which time the said Mahew could not obtaine any land of the Sachims upon the said Iland.

Att a meeting of the owners and purchasers the first original proprietors of Nantukett upon the said Iland of Nantukett the 8 of June 1674.

First, for as much there appeared Severall grounds of supposition of an indeavour by som lately admitted to the said Iland and severall that formerly had been admitted and stated there by the aforesaid proprietors to supplaint the said proprietors of their rights both generall and particular both by the defective wording and uncertain keeping of the said records as also by a passing two severall sorts of laws one against the other and both overthrowing and taking away the former right, they did proceed in before they were called to giv an accompt to Col. Lovlas by what right we held the said Iland, who upon his being fully satisfied about our said interest as by a charter or patent under his hand and seale, doth appear, wherein he hath giuen testimony of his understanding our just right deriued originally from my lord Starling, as also our Indian purchas of the said land, then in our tennure and occupation as by the said wryting bearing date the 28 of June 1671, may appear by pretence of which or under coller of which authority the said opposition is acted and carried on and now power pretended to undertake the desposall of our said Intrest and the acting of severall things preiuditiall to the same by means of which interruption we Cannot with peace and quietness amend the same; and whereas (we) applied ourselves to the generall Court of the said Ilands at the season thereof for their assistance of us by their advice, or otherwise, as it shoud belong to their cognisance in the stating of our said manner intrest for the future ; who returned us answer that they were not in Capacity of a Court to answer, by reason that the magistrates Nantukett were not there, namely : Thomas Macy, Mr Kirkland and John Gardiner, with whome we had severall times endeavored to understand their reasons, and in an amiable way to compose this matter but all in vaine, and, whereas there have been severall alienations of right from the ten first purchasers unto others and also som of the associates and partners of the said ten purchasers and not named in the first records, at Salsbury whereby it may appear who are now owners of the said lands the premises Considered together with severall other good Causes, we the aforesaid purchasers owners and freeholders of the said Iland of Nantucket have mutually agreed voted, and subscribed, being all present on the said Iland, that an accompt shall presently be taken and recorded of those that are now the present owners of said land, whether of the first ten purchasers or of their ten associates, and partners, who are now in record called the twenty purchasers and owners to whom the sole proper and equall right doe belong of the said Iland and appurtenances, and of the manner and order of all transaction that have past for the conveyances of any of the said rights untill this time, and also that the like orders shall be observed from time to time for the recording of all such alienation as shall be made for the future, that soe every man's right may be orderly known and distinguished from time to time to come by perpetuall.

Accordingly at the same meeting it did appear by the perusing the first originall records of Salsbury of 1659 and 1661 that tenn persons namely Mr Thomas Mayhew, Tristram Coffin, Senir, Mr Christopher Hussey, Richard Swayn, Thomas Barnard, Peeter Coffin, Steuen Greinle(fe), John Swayn, Thomas Macy and William Pike were the first tenn to whome the said Iland and appurtaynances did belong solely.

Secondly ; that at the said meeting in the same records doe appeare that Robert Pike was owned by Christopher Hussey to be his partner, Robert Barnard to be Thomas Barnards partner, Edward Starbuk to be Thomas Macys partner, Tristram Coffin Jun'r to be Steenen Greinlefes partner, James Coffin to be Peeter Coffins partner.

Att the same meeting on Nantukett 8. 4. 1674.

It is farther declared and owned that these are also assotiats (of) the rest of the ten purchasers namely that Thomas Colman was partner to John Swayn as by deed. Nathaniell Starbuk was partner to Tristram Coffin sen'r, John Smith the other 20th part with Mr. Thomas Mahew, Thomas Look partner with Richard Swayn as by deed, the right of William Pike was sould unto Richard Swayn as by deed ; Richard Swayn Conveyed the one halfe, thereof, to Nathaniell Boulter and the other halfe to his son in law and daughters in law namely William Bunter, Mary Bunter, Ann and Martha Bunter as by deed 18. 14. 1667. Alsoe Nathaniell Boulter sold his right to John Bishop sen'r as by deed. Capt. Christopher Hussey haue sold his owne part unto his sons Steeuën Hussey and John Hussey as by deed. John Smith deceased left his right to his two sons John Smith and Samuel Smith by equal deuision as by will appear 14 Feb 1670. Tristram Coffin senior haue conueyed one halfe of his owne proper right unto his son Steenen Coffin as by deed.

1674.—Continued.

Thomas Barnard conveyed one halfe of his proper right to his son Nathaniell Barnard as by deed.

Thomas Colman Conveyed one halfe of his right purchast of John Swayn unto his son John Colman.

It is to be taken notice that this list of the 20 first purchasers should haue been incerted before these Alinations made by Capt Hussey, John Smith, Tristram Coffin, Tho Barnard and Thomas Colman that being the most proper place for it, Namely. Mr Thomas Mayhew, Mr Tristram Coffin sen'r, Richard Swayn, Mr Christopher Hussey, Thomas Barnard, Nathaniell Starbuk, John Bishop sen'r, Mr Peeter Coffin, Steeuen Greinlefe, John Swayn, Thomas Macy, John Smith, Mr Robert Pike, Robart Barnard, Mr Edward Starbuk, Tristram Coffin Jun'r James Coffin, Thomas Colman Thomas look.

These are the twenty first purchasers who are called the first purchasers and thair assotiat to whom the right was sold by Mr Mayhew and which also bought the Indian right and the alinations aboue said and al other alinations whatsoever haue ben derived from them when it is generall or one of them when it is particular.

At the same meeting Tristram Coffin acknowledged the one halfe of his right to be conveyed to his son Henory Coffin as by deed bearing date May the 29. 1674.

It is also acknowledged by the said meeting that the neck called Mascatuk upon Nantukett which was by Mr Thomas Mayhew reserved to hyn selfe when he sold the patent right of Nantukett to the twenty purchasers, is no part of the sail but doe remain to him the said Mayhew according to the right that he obtained of the Indians there according as it doe appear in the deeds that we had of the said Mr Mayhew bearing date 2. 5. 1659.

1674.—Continued.

It doe also appear by a wryting in the manner of a morgage, under the hand of Thomas Macy unto Tristram Coffin of that part or so much of it belonging to Thomas Macy being his twentieth part as will pay the said Tristram Coffin for such sums as the said Coffin was to pay for the said Macy as by the said writing may appear bearing date 27. 7. 1660 but noe further proceedings did then appear about it.

Att the same meeting Nathaniel Starbuk was appoynted to keepe this book according to the order therein exprest with respect to recording all such alinations as shall be made for the future.

This to continue till farther order.

Samuel Winslow Def't

The Pl't declares that at his last. being in Boston he was unjustly molested arrested & imprisoned by the Def't for the sume of : 1781 sterling through w'ch unjust molestation the pl't was forced (being a stranger there) to Re-unload the vessell of him loaden. w'ch not only doth redound to the pl't's great loss & damage but also break his credit by which hee as a Young Merehant must live; all w'ch hee esteemes more than 500 G besides the damage susteined by the sale of his goods here, hee staying soe long untill the place was overstored with all sorts of goods; as also the hire of the vessel the wages & artichalls w'ch likewise doth amount to one hundred pound sterling. Wherefore the pl't craves Judgement against the Defend't for the paying the above mentioned sumes amounting together to 6001 Sterling & to restore unto him an obligation of 481 which the Def't unjustly constreined the pl't to give him together with costs.

 Nycoll wrote me that Mr Archdale haveing Gorges pattent for to present, and he not haveing the said Sterlings, the Kings commi-

 intelligence; but a little before he went to England: General
 Nycoll did acknowledge that the power of these Ilands was prop

And further those of Conecticutt have also formerly threatened by force that we should not use the K's Authority there & not to maintaine it for the K's P'rvince as confirmed to us.

It intimat's their force was as much as their p'tence ag'st Indyans & we doubt not but we could have prevailed to have brought O'r Indians to greater conformity than they have done by their Arms & so with R ? of some ? the Indyans, take leave

Right Hon'r'ble:

The lines upon the other side I wrote vpon the desire of the Sachem & his men, they were their owne words & the substance thereof they also had Expressed before Mr Backer, but since my writeing of them which was almost a weak since, I perceiue that deliuering up the armes to the Indians doth not relish well with the English, especialy since of late we h * of the great slaughter they haue made u * the English in other parts of the Country; I perceiue (at) Southampton ye English are much troubled; the Indians haue their armes, & I thinke it doth much disturb ye spirits of those haue them not, as for these Indians for my owne part I doe thinke they are as cordiall friends to the English as any in ye Country & what is written by ye'm is known to many to be ye truth, though God knows their hearts as their Counsellor s'd. Yo'r hon'rs Predecessor wrote severall letters to me to stirre me up about Instructing the Indians in the knowledge of God & true Religion & that he would further & encourage the business so farr as lay in his power. if it please your honnor, our Condition is such, the authority took sun laws out of boston & plimouth Law books to be our law: and made a law that if any Case com to tryell which this law doth not reach it should be tryed by the law of boston or the law of England: the Law of England non of vs knew; the law of boston hath been reiected as not the dukes law and no Law confermed aboue fiu pounds: Mr Gardner haue the dukes Law to Iudg by but Mr Mayhew and richard Sarson did reiect to keep Court by it at nantucket, so the Generall Court seases: yet Mr Mayhew giues out warrants and swears lurys sum times to goe according to Contiance & sum times according to Law, and hath not signed verdicts. APPENDIX "M."

COLONIAL MUSTER ROLLS.

SECTION OF THE WORK OF PUBLISHING ALL ROLLS DEPOSITED IN THE STATE CAPITOL, UP TO THE OUTBREAK OF THE WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

In this volume are exhausted the Colonial muster rolls of those who were in the service of the Province, from the capture of New York by the English in 1664 to the outbreak of the Revolution in 1775. In this interval occurred many events of great historical character, importance and value. The Stuart dynasty ended in England and was succeeded by the house of Hanover, which reigns. In the province of New York beginning with the earlier rolls that appear in this volume, Colonel Thomas Dongan appointed Governor of the province, the first Assembly under British rule was held, and the charter of liberty was adopted; the province was divided into ten counties: New York, Westchester, Dutchess, Albany, Ulster, Orange, Richmond, Kings, Queens and Westchester; the first Colonial post-office was established in New York on March 2, 1685; the following year, July 22, the city of Albany was incorporated, whose charter was published four days later; in 1687 the French invaded Seneca County, an act that was followed by the invasion of Canada by the Colonists—war being declared between England and France in May, 1689. Then follows Frontenac's expeditions against the English Colonies, the destruction of Fort Mactaquidi, the French retreat, and the failure of the English expedition that pursued Frontenac's army. Governor Leisler's refusal to turn over the fort at New York to Governor Sloughter's representative, Richard Ingoldesby; his arrest and imprisonment, trial and execution for treason, formed the most exciting events in the province during the year 1691.

During the next sixteen years the province was in a state of unrest, because of threatened French invasions, expeditions against Canada, troubles with the Iroquois, and the Negro insurrection in New York city. Within the next twenty years, the first newspaper was published in the province, the New York Gazette, by William Bradford, October, 1725; the boundary with Connecticut was established; the New York Weekly Journal was issued by John Peter Zenger Nov. 5, 1733, followed a year later by his arrest for libel, and his acquittal after an imprisonment of thirty-five weeks. The second Negro plot, which had for its object the destruction of New York City, disturbed the province in March, 1741. And in 1744 began the war of the Austrian succession between England and France.

Ten years later assembled the Convention to consider a Colonial Confederacy, the articles of union being drawn by Benjamin Franklin. The French and Indian War gave the Colonists their first real experience in what was to prove to be a long and sanguinary contest. The Sons of Liberty were first organized in New York City in 1765, and in that city October 7 of that year, gathered the Colonial Convention that condemned the Stamp Act. From that time on, to Lexington and Concord, the people of the province were in a constant state of disquiet, unrest and uncertainty.

Among these muster rolls will be found many interesting items such as: the pay rolls of privateers; muster rolls of Ulster County of 1686-1687; a list of Militia officers who were stationed many in 1689-1691; officers who were on duty at Schenectady 1696, and at Albany, 1697-1698; the military forces who were at Albany at different periods; several long lists of deserters; lists of warrants for commissions and Letters of Marque, during the French and Indian War; and a number of statements showing that during this period a bounty of £15 a man was paid.

A List of those men who were not up in the alarm.

George Klock	Roger Baxter
Jacob Enkish	John Baxter
Henry Sander	Pieter Schuyler, Jun
Lawrence Zimmerman	Jacob Folts, Jun
Georg Zimmerman	Gerlagh Meyer
Severinus Snell

All the above mentioned persons have lawfully excused themselves except George Klock, who says that he is free by an act of the Assembly because he is a Miller and his son George he kept back in the Alarm till the second Day on which Day he came with the Parcel of Indians he being asked what kept him so long answer'd that he waited for the Indians of which he was to be Commander for which Reason I think that I may fine him as ere long I intend to do.

As for those which have brought in complaints against me, they have been at Herkemans also in the Alarm but were not willing to do any Duty but separated themselves from the Company in so much that the Company was continually dispersed that we could not so much hardly as mount a Guard on Monday Night.

These Regiments are calculated with due Regard to the increase of settlements in this Country, and to the Ease of the Inhabitants, the Well Disciplining & speedy assembling of the Men, for the defence of these frontiers which are more Exposed to Incursions than any other parts of the Province. The Regiment of Horse require an Adjutant & Quarter Master And it will be better to have an Adjutant to each of the Regiments of Foot. These Regiments will at present Contain about 500 men each, To be divided if possible into Nine Companies, and one Captain, Two Lieutenants, one Ensign, Three Serjeants, Three Corporals and a Drummer to each Company. So Soon as the Field Officers are Commissioned enquiries can be made for filling up the Inferior Vacancys in each Regiment.

INDEX OF NAMES.

purpose of this index is to supply the name of every person who is listed on every Military Roll of record in the Province of New York from 1664, when the English took possession, to 1775, when the Colonies were in revolt. The names cover all the muster rolls that are printed in the First and Third Annual Reports of the State Historian, known as the First and Third Annual Series, Vols. I and II.

The figures "I" and "II" that follow a name, indicate the volume in which that name appears.

The General Index for the Third Annual Report, known as Volume II of the First Annual Series follows, and begins on page 1131.
